Glad Lucas and narrative art are gone and forgotten but we do need a film museum

Things have been nice around here since Lucas hightailed it back to the west coast. But there's this gnawing feeling that something is missing: the prospect of a new museum.

Not a museum of narrative art. But an actual film museum. "Narrative art." That's a term for eggheads. Or for some phony and his friend, the mayor, trying to unload a collection on an unsuspecting public who doesn't know any better.

Take a peek at what "narrative art" means on Wikipedia. Can you figure out how to make a museum out of that mumbo-jumbo? Narrative art is boring, diffuse, impossible to understand. Not something for a city of big shoulders or a city that walks on the wild side.

I think what everyone thought we were going to get on the lakefront inside the melted vanilla ice cream building was a plain old "Film" museum. And we should have one.

With exhibits, classes and historic artifacts all related to the movies. Lectures about film, and visits by film makers and film stars. A museum of everything dealing with film. Including films.

Chicago started the film industry. The old Essanay studios were here. Still are, at 1345 W. Argyle, albeit in a new life as a college--which cherishes its history. It's where the Charlie Chaplin comedies were made in 1915.

Facets, an institution that is all things film, has been thriving for years, also on the north side at 1517 W. Fullerton. Not only as a repository of films themselves, but also as a place on the forefront of film education with a mission.

And right here in the South Loop still stand the buildings of Chicago's Film Row. They supported the movie-showing industry in the early days. Buildings that leased the film reels to the theaters, and sold them everything from the concessions to the tickets, everything anyone would need to run a movie theater. Today these buildings house everything from yoga studios to restaurants. But they're there! A testament to Chicago film history.

Columbia College Chicago, a South Loop institution with a renowned film department pays tribute to "Film Row" at 1104 S. Wabash. And in other ways pays tribute to the early Chicago film industry around its campus.

Steve Reginald, who lives in the South Loop, is a film scholar. I call him a film factotum. He runs a movie group at Daystar Center in the heart of the South Loop and is the kind of guy who could run a Chicago film museum.

But there are a lot of people in this town who could make a film museum hum with activity and information. A lot of people who would make a film museum in Chicago world renowned. And they wouldn't insist on it being part of the Museum Campus--or insist it be on the lakefront, like some people we know.

And don't forget all the interesting, popular films that are made right here in Chicago these days, as well. That's Chicago film history in the making.

There are lots of buildings to repurpose everywhere to give a Chicago film museum a great home. And lots of infill land everywhere on which to build one, if that were the desire. And many generous people who would bankroll it.

Quietly, unassumingly, tastefully. Paying tribute to Chicago's past while looking to Chicago's future.

Mondays with Mike: You can't go back... August 8, 2016

The best thing on the radio in my view is an hour-long weekly program on NPR called On the Media, produced by WNYC, and hosted by journalism veterans Brooke Gladstone and Bob Garfield.

Full disclosure: I'm a journalism grad, a giant consumer of journalism, and I think about what makes good journalism more than the average person. So On the Media (OTM) is right in my wheelhouse.

But while it's heady, it's not geeky—and it serves a double purpose: In examining what the press got right and wrong and why over the last week, it provides a really efficient roundup of the big stories. So it's a nice weekly digest—with the addition of explaining what might have been distorted with a little fact checking. Which is to say, you don't have to be a journalism geek to enjoy the program.

OTM also takes the time to dive a little deeper into topics that get a high volume but a low quality of coverage.

Last week, it was immigration. One segment looked at perceptions and misperceptions about immigration here in the United States. It featured an interview with Prof. Doug Massey, a sociologist at Princeton.

Massey brought a true social scientist's approach to the subject: That is, there was no moral pontificating, and no vilification of people who are afraid of immigrants. Instead, there was just a lot of good information, information that helps understand the angst.

For example, when asked about the biggest myth about the state of illegal immigration, Massey had this to say:

In fact, illegal migration ended eight years ago and has been zero or negative since 2008, because migration is a young person's game. If you don't migrate between the ages of 15 and 30, you don't migrate at all, and the average age in Mexico is now 28 years old.

Massey had illuminating and often surprising answers to a lot of other questions—one observation really struck me:

You have to remember that the baby boom grew up in the whitest, most native America that's ever existed. In 1970, the foreign-born percentage of the United States, for the first and only time in American history, fell below 5 percent. And African-Americans were segregated and out of sight. That's the America that people look back and think that that's normal. And that's all changed.

It certainly has changed.

He went on to explain that no matter what we do—even if we shut off all immigration, the America of 1970 isn't coming back.

"That world is gone for good," said Massey, "and there's nothing you can do about it, except adapt and make it work for you."

The good news, of course, is that humans can and do change. I know this from personal experience.

I didn't know a single black person until I was 17--that's when I met a black girl at Sears, where we both worked. I didn't know a gay person until... and I could reel off a dozen more. Experience and personal relationships opened my eyes. But it never stops.

Even when we first moved to the city, there were characters on the street who would give me pause and make me wary. Some of that is healthy. But some is borne of ignorance. The first times I was in the distinct minority on a subway car, I was self-conscious and if not afraid. I was nervous.

Now, I don't even notice. I don't think my old self would recognize the new.

I'd like to tell you I don't have a racist, bigoted, frightened bone in my body. Except that'd be a patent lie, because, well, I'm a human being.

And I don't necessarily like change.

But in the end, change has always been good for me.

You can listen to the recording of the interview, as well as read a transcript. I hope you will.

OPINION The views and opinions expressed in this newsletter are those of the contributors and do not necessarily reflect those of the editor or South Loop Referral Group.

Lollapalozers by Dick Newcomb

Mr. Aaron Montgomery Ward, believing that the city of Chicago deserved a "free and clear" lakefront park for all, and that he had the public's support, struggled for twenty years to protect the city's portion of Lake Michigan's shoreline from commercial and industrial intrusion. It is said he found the city's enthusiasm sorely disappointing. He died before the city awoke to the sublimity of his vision. When at last it saw how superior its lakeshore was to those of New York, Toronto and Cleveland, who had sold their waterfronts for a mess of factories, condos and warehouses, Chicago almost broke its arm slapping itself on its back.

But it still loved money and yearned for more. If that meant kowtowing to craven politicians and forgetting some dreamy, unprofitable waste of precious commercial space, Chicago was willing to go along.

Compromises were made for a few nice museums and some leftovers from The Columbian Exhibition. This still left lots of room for real parkland. And who could object to a football field for the heroes of 1918? (But did it really need a flying saucer on top?)

Chicago caved again when old Mayor Daley honored Colonel McCormack by obliterating several acres of prime parkland with his eponymous convention center and parking lot. And of course it did not dare argue with the Chicago Outfit when they put up Lake Point Towers.

That did not end it. Chicago was always looking for an extra buck, and when the car-worshipping masses wanted to drive fast into the loop, Daley the Elder laid 4- to 8-lane cement ribbons through Grant and Jackson Parks, over the objections of mere citizens.

Daley the Younger later bulldozed Meigs Field - for the sake of more parkland he said - but then leased a chunk of it to a stadium for loud music. He then started building Millennium and Maggie Daley Parks, as if amusement parks were the same as real parkland. Still, their quality and popularity suggested that Mr. Ward might stop spinning in his grave.

But wait Aaron. Don't rest yet. Chicago's money-lust has given us Lollapalooza. Aaron's "free and clear" parkland is now being prostituted so that mobs of idle youth can find how much noise it takes to make their eardrums bleed. They dump sound stages upon, drive trucks over, and trample under foot the park's sod. They fill our ERs with dope-addled, slack-jawed losers.

We, The City of Chicago, let them in - we invite them in - for the sake of their parents' money, which they wantonly spread among the city's innkeepers, liquor stores and dope peddlers.

To prepare for this festival of dissipation, the City genuflects before its beloved cash and erects guarded fences weeks ahead to block mere citizens' access to a wide swath of the park. Once the swarm at last departs, entry is denied for months while the damage is slowly and expensively repaired.

Just so the whole mess can repeat next year.

Sorry, Aaron.

Book Review: The Last Painting of Sara De Vos, by Dominic Smith (Farrar Straus and Giroux 2016)

All water ultimately flows together, as do the captivating stories of three people, all criminals, living in places where the land meets the sea, whose lives over three centuries are entwined by a 17th century Dutch painting. The Last Painting of Sara De Vos is fiction: neither the painting nor the protagonists are real. But Dominic Smith, an Australian transplanted to Austin, whose early work appeared in the Printers Row Journal, has written a book of undeniable truths. We are, as one reviewer said, all products of fate, choice and consequence, as this gorgeous story reminds us.

Sara De Vos is an amalgam of the handful of women admitted to the Dutch artists guild in 1631 that included Rembrandt and Vermeer. The death of her only child drives her to paint what for women was illicit: a haunting landscape called "At the Edge of a Wood." Women were restricted to indoor subjects, since they were incapable of dealing with the deific infinity of the horizon. Not only does she paint contraband, she sells it without guild permission, and thus becomes an outlaw. In 1957, Ellie Shipley, a struggling, talented Australian graduate student, who supports herself with restoration work, likewise succumbs to the lure of crime when a shady art dealer convinces her she has the talent to paint an undetectable forgery of Sara's now-invaluable painting. Marty de Groot, an unhappy but wealthy New York lawyer, and a Dutch descendant of the painting's original owner, begins as a victim, when his painting is purloined and replaced by Ellie's forgery. He descends into villainy himself in 1958, continuing for over four decades, when he assumes a new identity and seduces the forger through fraud and deception.

The three conjoin in Sidney in 2000, when Ellie, a distinguished curator, mounts an exhibit of Dutch women painters. Ellie knows the forgery, and the original, will show up, and "feels certain this is the beginning of how it all ends." Sara is discovered in her own painting, when a museum conservation scientist finds a white figure of a woman, hidden by layers of pigment. Now an octogenarian widower, Marty comes to the show to settle some scores.

The book captivates from the beginning and leaves us sad to have it end. It offers a panoply of human emotions and, and teaches us so much about art--and heart.

Dragons have long been absent from their ancestral home in the Veiled Valley. Through spells and deceptions, a mysterious shape-shifter attacked them and now threatens the Valley's hard-won tranquility. With the dragons' strengths and magic apparently gone forever, the lives of the Valley's humans and otherworldly creatures hang in the balance. Will two young dragon-riders help heal the rift between human and dragon?

Malevir: Dragons Return is the first of Susan Bass Marcus' epic fantasy series, a fresh take on classic themes of family, courage, and sacrifice that recalls the thrills fans find in the work of Anne McCaffrey or J.R.R. Tolkien.

I can't believe I'm telling you this Aug 10, 2016

Public speaking comes fairly easy to me. Acting on stage does not. But that's exactly what I'll be doing at Victory Gardens Zacek McVay Theater in Chicago this Saturday, August 13 at 2:30 pm.

Some back story. Earlier this year I attended one of two accessible performances of Too Much Light put on by the Neo-Futurists. The Neo-Futurists are a collective of Chicago writers-performers "dedicated to creating honest, unpredictable theatre," and in Too Much Light productions cast members attempt to perform a perpetually rotating list of two-minute plays in 60 minutes.

After the success of their two accessible performances this year those honest and unpredictable Neo-Futurists took things one step further. They used funds from grants they'd received from The Chicago Community Trust and Alpha-wood Foundation Chicago, teamed up again with the Victory Gardens Access Project, and offered their popular Intro to Too Much Light playwriting program to a class accessible to performers and writers with and without disabilities. The class was offered free of charge. I couldn't resist.

The hope was that half of the enrollees would identify as having a disability. The Neo-Futurists achieved their goal. In fact, we outnumber the others: of the seven performers, Two use wheelchairs, I am blind, and one uses a prosthetic arm. . Over the course of ten three-hour sessions every Saturday (we started on June 4, 2016) the seven of us have:

- explored the process and tools needed to create a two-minute play
- followed the Neo-Futurist tenets of honesty, brevity, audience connection and random chance to write plays from our own life experiences
- examined specific play formulas and styles that are similar to plays performed in Too Much Light
- pitched a few of our plays to teachers to have them performed Saturday

These productions used to be called Too Much Light Makes the Baby Go Blind. I'm not sure that they took the Blind word out because I am involved, but must say, I prefer the shortened title.

And while we're mentioning that blindness of mine, I need to tell you that losing my sight some twenty-odd years ago left me with a unique version of paranoia. While I don't mind people looking at or listening to me when I'm sitting or standing still (like when I'm giving a talk), the thought that people might be watching me attempt a task -- even one as simple as finding a doorknob -- fills me with anxiety.

My class: (Clockwise - Andrew Lund, Beth Finke, Kathleen Guillion, Rukmini Girish, Michele Lee,, Whitney the Seeing Eye Dog, Grishma Shah)
Courtesy Neo Futurists.

I started waking up Saturdays wondering why the heck I signed up for this thing. The commute to Victory Gardens isn't easy, days off work are precious, I stink at memorizing lines, and I hate having people watch me perform.

I liked learning about playwriting, though, and every week I grew more fond of our teachers and my classmates. Most of them have acted before. It was a treat to experience their work, and hear it improve from week to week.

I stayed in class, and was determined to keep news of this Saturday's performance a secret from my friends. But then last Saturday we had our dress rehearsal.

The four of us with disabilities wrote some plays that address accessibility, and many others that don't mention it at all. One thing the plays have in common? They're all pretty good. And so, I've changed my mind. (Performance was Aug. 13, 2016) The performance Saturday won't go any longer than 45 minutes and will feature live captioning and American Sign Language for people who are hard of hearing and audio headphones for people who want the action on stage described. Victory Gardens is wheelchair accessible, and a touch tour of the stage and props will take place ahead of the show for anyone interested.

Seeing Eye dog steals the show 8/14/2016

A huge thank you to the neighbors, friends and writers from my memoir classes who made it to Victory Gardens yesterday afternoon for my Chicago stage debut. Your enthusiasm and laughter was very reassuring, and performing on stage ended up being a lot of fun -- especially for Whitney the Seeing Eye dog. She stole the show.

After celebrating with friends afterwards, I returned home to find a note in my in box from one of our Neo-Futurist teachers congratulating us for "nailing" it. "The audience left with huge smiles on their faces," she said. "Your dedication this summer paid off in a big, big way."

The best news of all? Too Much Light's accessible theater program is going to continue. "This is the first time Trevor and I have taught an accessible Neo-Futurist class AND it's the first time we've taught a Neo-Futurist class that lasted for as many weeks as ours did," Malic wrote. "We want to keep doing this!" Her note asked for feedback from all of us before they move forward on future classes, and I'll get to work on that shortly. Right now, I'm heading out with Whitney to bask in her spotlight.

Recently, SLRG (South Loop Referral Group) had an early morning tour of the Papermaker's Garden at Wabash and 8th with the faculty coordinator, Assistant Professor Melissa Potter and community volunteer Donna Hippensteel.

With the Garden in full bloom we were treated to detailed explanations of the individual projects including Seeds In-Service: A Papermaking Institute, women's and men's health plants and plants from around the world that are currently threatened with extinction because of wars in their natural habitat – all of which will eventually be made into paper. As Reported by Stephan DeSantis.

Creative Destruction

When You Know Better, You Do Better

Illustration: John Garrison

NEW CITY

Modern-day Chicago is one of the world's greatest cities but it didn't start out that way. A river was reversed, sections of lake-front filled in and several waves of industries and cultures coalesced (or segregated) as the city slowly became who and what she is today.

Getting here wasn't always fair and certainly wasn't easy. Natives were wiped out. Homes were torn down to create highways. Civic protests shaped the politics. Entire social classes of people were moved out. And in. Murders led to introspection. Or not.

And yet amidst all that terribleness, there is beauty. The skyline is a work of art. The South Side is the birthplace of gospel music. The parks are an urban marvel. And let's not even get started on the quality of our high school basketball and our pizza.

Some things were destroyed to make way for where we are now.

When you have a plan to methodically replace a thing with something better, we like to call that process creative destruction. Granted, "better" is always a matter of opinion. But we like the fact that old railroad tracks make way for new bike trails and artists in Pilsen and Bronzeville are turning the concept of blighted neighborhood on its head. Most recently, social activists created a movement that likely will change law enforcement and possibly race relations forever.

We could go on and on about ongoing tensions that led to changes in the school systems, health systems, sewer system, arts, industry, tourism and economy. When you know better, you can do better. Right now, a handful of Chicagoans are creating the new blueprint.

Here are a few of their stories. (Adrienne Samuels Gibbs)

Chicken and a Movie.

Nando's Peri-Peri Chicken

The other day, the wife and I ventured beyond our living room to sample the local offerings of Nando's Peri-Peri Chicken, newly opened at Roosevelt Collection. We had the Chicken Breast Sandwich served on a toasted Portuguese roll with arugula, tomato, pickled red onions and "Perinaise." You can choose various marinades . . . or not. The choice is from hot to mild: xtra hot, hot medium, lemon & herb or Mango & Lime or plain . . .ish. We chose Mango & Lime. The chicken was moist and the marinade was tasty. The view inside looking out or outside on the patio is superb looking north over the British School.

"Café Society"

Then we walked across the way to Kerasotes ShowPlace ICON Theatre to see Woody Allen's new movie, "Café Society." It stars Jeannie Berlin, Steve Carell, Jesse Eisenberg, Blake Lively, Parker Posey, Kristen Stewart, Corey Stoll, Ken Stott. By watching this movie, you will be immersed in the aura of the era of 1930's Hollywood and New York. Again, Allen makes you feel like you're right there with backdrops of art deco homes, period fashions, and vintage autos of the time. And he will wedge more dialogue into a movie than anyone I know. The jokes ; they are vintage Woody Allen. The "Chicken and a Movie" are both rated 4 stars out of 5.

Riverline Project Phase 1 Set To Break Ground Mid-September

It looks like the first phase of the Riverline project is about to get started (via Curbed):

It's been a long time in the making, but now we have a more approximate date for the Riverline mega-project's groundbreaking. According to developers CMK Companies and Lendlease, workers are expected to break ground on the ambitious project in mid-September. The development, with a master plan designed by Perkins+Will, will span 14 acres and will deliver 3,600 new residences to the greater South Loop area when completed. The first phase will focus on two towers, 60 townhouses, and a 3.5 acre riverfront park.

As you may recall back in late 2015, this massive project was announced. It's a an ambitious one and a doozy that if realized will dramatically transform the west side of our neighborhood.

While it's a big project, it does seem to make a lot of sense. This land seems highly attractive as it will provide quick access to the loop and various other desirable neighborhoods (such as the West Loop). Couple this with the plans for the gigantic old post office and it's easy to see why they're moving forward.

The curbed post has some additional renderings. Take a look!

Fit-Results Moving from South Dearborn to State/9th (Old UFC Gym Location)

A reader writes:

Fit-Results (<https://fitresults.net/>) at 620 South Dearborn just signed a lease at the old UFC gym space on State Street, south of Jimmy Green's (825 S. State) and have begun renovations in hopes to open by the end of September.

Results of Roosevelt Road Upgrade - NOT GOOD!

Posted by Lin Pruscck 8/17/16

The "upgrade" of the Roosevelt Road corridor is producing several unwelcome consequences, and the CDOT management seem unwilling to make any changes.

Westbound buses stopping just west of Michigan now jam up the intersection because they removed the bus cutout. The big articulated buses turning into Roosevelt often block BOTH westbound lanes when they stop.

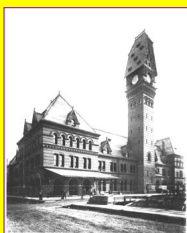

The additional, unnecessary crosswalk east of Indiana now causes huge backups of traffic on Indiana and back to 16th street during events. This was also unnecessary.

Cars are making illegal turns in and out of the BP Station at Roosevelt and Wabash, despite the traffic control devices.

And the biggest problem wasn't addressed - the pedestrians crossing mid-block under the "L" tracks. A barrier to prevent this MUST be installed.

Then there's the new street furniture. The photo shows a bench outside the "L" station. Why won't the police work on this issue?

Rosebud's Artist's Cafe Apparently Coming to Old Artist's Cafe Spot (1150 S. Wabash)

A pretty big restaurant tidbit on Eater Chicago recently about a respected group comes to the Sloop:

There are also two other nuggets. A liquor license application shows Rosebud is taking over The Artist's Cafe in the South Loop. The restaurant, which closed earlier this summer, has been renamed on the application to Rosebud's Artist's Cafe. A spokeswoman didn't return comment when asked about the project.

As you may recall, back in early June a reader noticed that Artist's Cafe was apparently closed. We have gone by since then and clearly they weren't reopening.

So instead it appears we're getting a Rosebud (or some iteration of it).

IRS Warns Taxpayers of Summer Surge in Automated Phone Scam Calls; Requests for Fake Tax Payments Using iTunes Gift Cards

IR-2016-99, August 2, 2016

español

WASHINGTON — The Internal Revenue Service today warned taxpayers to stay vigilant against an increase of IRS impersonation scams in the form of automated calls and new tactics from scammers demanding tax payments on iTunes and other gift cards.

The IRS has seen an increase in “robo-calls” where scammers leave urgent callback requests through the phone telling taxpayers to call back to settle their “tax bill.” These fake calls generally claim to be the last warning before legal action is taken. Once the victim calls back, the scammers may threaten to arrest, deport or revoke the driver’s license of the victim if they don’t agree to pay.

“It used to be that most of these bogus calls would come from a live-person. Scammers are evolving and using more and more automated calls in an effort to reach the largest number of victims possible,” said IRS Commissioner John Koskinen. “Taxpayers should remain alert for this summer surge of phone scams, and watch for clear warning signs as these scammers change tactics.”

In the latest trend, IRS impersonators are demanding payments on iTunes and other gift cards. The IRS reminds taxpayers that any request to settle a tax bill by putting money on any form of gift card is a clear indication of a scam.

Some examples of the varied tactics seen this year are:

Demanding payment for a “Federal Student Tax.” See IR-2016-81.

- Demanding immediate tax payment for taxes owed on an iTunes or other type of gift card
- Soliciting W-2 information from payroll and human resources professionals. See IR-2016-34.

“Verifying” tax return information over the phone. See IR-2016-40.

Pretending to be from the tax preparation industry. See IR-2016-28

Since these bogus calls can take many forms and scammers are constantly changing their strategies, knowing the telltale signs is the best way to avoid becoming a victim.

The IRS will never:

- Call to demand immediate payment over the phone, nor will the agency call about taxes owed without first having mailed you a bill.
- Threaten to immediately bring in local police or other law-enforcement groups to have you arrested for not paying.
- Demand that you pay taxes without giving you the opportunity to question or appeal the amount they say you owe.
- Require you to use a specific payment method for your taxes, such as a prepaid debit card, gift card or wire transfer.
- Ask for credit or debit card numbers over the phone.

If you get a phone call from someone claiming to be from the IRS and asking for money and you don’t owe taxes, here’s what you should do:

- Do not give out any information. Hang up immediately.

Contact TIGTA to report the call. Use their “IRS Impersonation Scam Reporting” web page or call 800-366-4484.

Report it to the Federal Trade Commission. Use the “FTC Complaint Assistant” on FTC.gov. Please add “IRS Telephone Scam” in the notes.
