South Loop Neighbors Quarterly Meeting

At the South Loop Neighbors Meeting on Sept. 30th at East/West University, we heard Cassandra Francis, President of Friends of the Parks speak concerning their position on the Lucas Museum. The Friends of the Parks are in their 40th year. Also at the meeting were representatives of Golub and Company who are developing townhouses in the Praire Avenue District. It is the site of the proposed X/O high rise development which crashed with the housing market. The new proposal at 18th and Praire is for 4 story townhomes. This proposal still needs to be approved by the city. Golub also is developing the property at 9th and State and will break ground in 30 to 45 days, they said. Also at the meeting was Alderman Will Burns who introduced himself to the residents of Printers Row and Dearborn Park I.

The oddly shaped 4th ward came about when the current 4th ward was changed and he will lose a section of Hyde Park. Apparently, the new 4th Ward which juts out to the lake front and then back west north of Roosevelt Rd, is to make up for lost population and geographic area.

OPINION

The views and opinions expressed in this newsletter are those of the contributors and do not necessarily reflect those of the editor or South Loop Referral Group.

When walking near the Agora at Roosevelt and Michigan yesterday, an old Seinfeld episode came to mind.

My South Loop friend, and dedicated observer of South Loop life, Jim Borman, is my blogging guest today--on the topic of abject homelessness in the South Loop. Many other neighborhoods are affected by this misery--including the heart of the Loop, of course. But Jim tells us what he's been seeing in the South Loop--and it ain't pretty. He wonders if the City is actually addressing this issue? Or is all our money being thrown at developers for stadiums and skate parks--while people deeply suffer near these coming structures?

By Jim Borman from Sept 3, 2014

Why? Just like Elaine's boyfriend, he took it out. The difference was the person who took it out was urinating in plain view after spending an evening sleeping in Grant Park.

Continuing my stroll down Michigan Avenue, I noticed more homeless people simply sprawled out sleeping or blindly staring into a deep abyss of sadness or begging for money. What does it say about a city of affluence when Chicago's Magnificent Mile is looking more like Calcutta than the Windy City of economic growth for all segments of the population?

What does it say when Chicago's rulers allocate extensive funds for a multi-million dollar project for BMX bikers and skate boarders and people set up a tent in which to sleep?

What message is sent when Chicago's leaders send dollars into the pockets of developers of hotels and basketball arenas when they turn a blind eye to the suffering of its human capital?

The Chicago Coalition for the Homeless does fine work. Just today, it is launching a campaign to increase the minimum wage to $15 an hour. They have numerous ongoing programs to address the broad needs of those without shelter. But despite their work much remains to be done to address the physical and emotional needs of Chicago's most vulnerable. What will the political leaders do to ensure the safety and health of these individuals?

Feedback from Bonnie's "Where have all the mailboxes gone?

"There are two mail boxes left in the south loop, that I have found. One is at the southwest corner of Harrison and Federal and the other is on the corner of Harrison and Clark." Tina Phillips

Winner!

The Invisible Bridge The Fall of Nixon and the Rise of Reagan By Perlstein, Rick Annotation:The latest by Rick Perlstein (Nixonland), continuing his excellent series on America in the 70s, is one of the major works of biography and history this year. He begins at the tail end of the Nixon years (including Watergate) and concludes with Reagan's failed 1976 bid for the Republican presidential nomination, showing how Reagan's sunny optimism spoke powerfully during the "Fear Decade" (as he calls it) and laid the groundwork for later success. While the book focuses on Reagan, it's also a wide-ranging chronicle of a fascinating decade that laid the groundwork for much in modern American politics. It's a doorstopper but history and poli-sci buffs will eat this up.

Safe & Sound Blog

by Beth Finke

<http://Bethfinke.wordsmith.com>

I should have known she'd ask that I have a children's book published, but here's a confession: I don't know a whole lot about children's literature. Not modern children's literature, at least. I read a ton of books when I was little, but after I traded my children's library card for one that got me into the adult section of the Elmhurst Public Library, I never looked back.

This means that when the Sheboygan Children's Book Festival started touting the writers who'd be there last weekend, I didn't recognize a single name. I just figured everyone on the list was like me: Midwesterners willing to travel to this out-of-the-way Wisconsin town to sell a few books and enjoy the quiet.

Boy, was I wrong.

The Sheboygan Children's Book Festival is spearheaded by two retired children's book librarians who volunteer their time to the festival, and every year these two dynamos manage to bring a few very highly-regarded children's books and authors to small-town kids in Wisconsin. Here's a sampling of just four of the 16 writers at the festival last weekend:

Kevin Henkes won a Caldecott Medal for Kitten's First Full Moon and Newberry honors for two of his novels, Olive's Ocean and The Year of Billy Miller

Blue Ballew wrote Chasing Vermeer and other mysteries for children that regularly appear on the New York Times best-seller's list

Peter Brown won a Caldecott Medal for Creepy Carrots, and he came from Brooklyn to be at the festival

Raina Telgemeier traveled from Astoria, New York to be at the Sheboygan festival, and she has a graphic memoir called Smile that was named a New York Times Book Review Editors' Choice.

So was I intimidated by all these famous writers? Heck no. I was impressed! Both with the fair organizers who got these writers to come, and the writers who took planes, trains and automobiles to get to Sheboygan.

A volunteer driver chauffeured Whitney and me to visit small-town schools as part of the festival Friday, and at one school a starstruck boy approached to shake my hand. "You're the first blind person I've ever met," he said. When I took Whitney's harness off at another school to let kids pet her, one girl crawled up on all fours. "I'm a Seeing Eye dog," she said. Her friend was right behind, closing her eyes and grasping a belt loop for guidance.

Our presentation the next morning was in a section of Bookworm Gardens dedicated to Helen Keller. The flowers and plants feel -- and smell -- sensational there. A six-year-old with visual impairments came to hear me speak, along with her brother and her parents. Maya is learning Braille at school, and she came up to the front to help me answer questions from the audience afterwards.

My favorite question from the entire festival came later. I sat on a panel about "Animal BFFs" and a woman in the audience wondered if losing my sight had heightened my sense of intuition.

"Whoa, I've never been asked that before!" I said, taking time to ponder. Do I? Sometimes I'm right about guessing which elevator will open first. Hmm. The other day I thought about Colleen, and when I got home there was a message from her on the answering machine. You think...and suddenly I realize I had my answer: no. If I'd had a good sense of intuition, I would have known she'd be asking that, and I would have been ready with a response besides, who needs the New York Times or some fancy-schmancy medal? I've got a secret weapon: Whitney.

BEST OF CHICAGO 2014

We know, the wait is excruciating, as you suffer the traumas of another city year: the Cubs bomb again, Hot Doug's closes and the city can't even set itself on fire when it wants to. Just when everything seems hopeless, here we come with the twenty-second edition of the definitive Best of Chicago to renew your faith in your city and in humanity itself.

But, as they say, without you we're nothing. So take a break and give us one, by adding your collective wisdom to this endeavor. We've got sixty-two questions to ask you, but you don't have to answer them all. And we'll tabulate the doings, add our own take, and drop the whole megillah on October 30, just in time for Halloween and Day of the Dead.

You must vote in at least five categories for your ballot to count. Only one entry per reader; suspected ballot-stuffers will be disqualified. Votes may be cast through midnight, Tuesday, Oct. 21st.

Friends of the Parks Opposes Use of Lakefront Public Open Space for Proposed Lucas Cultural Arts Museum

Chicago, Illinois (May 20, 2014) – Friends of the Parks has a long history of partnership with the City of Chicago, the Chicago Park District and various governmental agencies to preserve and protect our open space and parks for Chicagoans and visitors. “While we are very supportive of the Lucas Cultural Arts Museum coming to Chicago, we oppose its siting on lakefront public open space. The Lakefront Protection Ordinance specifically states that, ‘in no instance will further private development be permitted east of Lake Shore Drive’. It is clear that the siting of the Lucas Museum in this lakefront location contradicts our prior city visionaries’ goal of continuous public open space along the lakefront” says Cassandra Francis, President of Friends of the Parks.

“Although the proposed site is now used as a parking lot, its future reversion to parkland is possible. Once a building is in place, it is forever precluded from being public open space. This is not a new issue given Friends of the Parks’ mission and extensive public opposition to the proposed siting of the Chicago Children’s Museum in Grant Park. It is a slippery slope,” says Lauren Moltz, Friends of the Parks’ Board Chair.

We look forward to working collaboratively with our open space partners, the community, the Mayor’s Office and the Chicago Park District to identify the strengths of alternative sites that will secure broad community support.

Friends of the Parks is a 39 year old nonprofit parks advocacy group whose mission is to preserve, protect, improve, and promote the use of Chicago’s parks and preserves. We advance our programmatic, educational, and advocacy work with the support of our members, donors and volunteers, and (through) our governmental, community, and environmental partnerships.

In a connected world, even gardens are part of the Internet of Things. Come learn the basics of urban gardening and how electronics can give us better insights into homegrown food at The Field Museum.

The Field Museum, in collaboration with the Peterson Garden Project, hosts a community vegetable garden. The Edible Treasures garden, tended by museum employees donating their time, will be hosting an electronic gardening project for teens ages 14-18 on Wednesdays starting on September 17 through October 15th, from 4pm to 6pm.

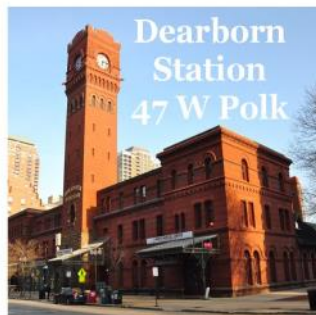

The goal of the program is to introduce students to urban gardening through the lens of digital media. The program will focus on building microcontroller-based sensors for things like soil moisture, temperature, and light to answer deeper questions that urban gardeners need to know to get the most out of their homegrown crops.

The Electronic Gardens project is free-of-charge and no registration is required. For more information, visit <http://www.fieldmuseum.org/at-the-field/programs/digital-media-teens> or contact us at digitalstudio@fieldmuseum.org

Museum Campus Transit Plan Ideas Include Street Car System, Ticket Kiosks

By Lizzie Schiffman Tufano on October 13, 2014 5:57am

MUSEUM CAMPUS — The Chicago Park District and the Metropolitan Planning Council are seeking ideas from the public on how to "rebrand Museum Campus as its own destination" at a public meeting Tuesday, Grant Park Conservancy President Bob O'Neill said.

The goal is to "to come up with a framework plan for the whole Museum Campus" that coincides with construction of the Lucas Museum of Narrative Arts and a Jeanne Gang-designed bridge connecting Northerly Island to the museum mainland, O'Neill said.

Tuesday's meeting is the start of a six-month planning process featuring multiple calls for ideas from the public. The open house from 4-6 p.m. Tuesday at 140 S. Dearborn St., Suite 1400, will focus specifically on transportation ideas for Museum Campus's overhaul. Ideas submitted on the Metropolitan Planning Council's brainstorming website include a light rail system, streetcars circling the campus and ticketing kiosks to alleviate long lines.

One suggestion for an improved pedestrian experience down Roosevelt Road is already underway.

The community input process mirrors the meetings that preceded the last Museum Campus strategic redesign in the mid 1990s.

Tuesday's meeting will include a presentation of ideas currently in the mix, followed by breakout sessions for attendees to comment on existing plans and suggest alternatives.

The top priorities are expected to be simplifying bus, cyclist and pedestrian access from the Loop and South Loop to museum campus, and improving transportation between destinations within the property, O'Neill said. "With the Lucas Museum going in, with Northerly Island opening up and the other four institutions out there, there will be soon be six institutions, and there needs to be a new plan to get everyone working together to get people there."

O'Neill said other institutions on Museum Campus are launching their own facelifts as well, including the Field Museum, which is currently working behind the scenes to make the 93-year-old facility's operations more environmentally friendly.

The "rebranding" also coincides with a 40-acre Northerly Island nature reserve that's set to be completed in 2017.

Activity in the Near South Side has certainly picked up this year. Not only have we seen new residential developments on the rise, but the Chicago Park District has been equally busy. This past year alone we've heard about plans for the Lucas Museum of Narrative Art coming to the Near South Side, Grant Park's three-acre skate park, Fred Anderson Park, Northerly Island's updated plans, and now comes word of the museum campus transportation plan.

General Superintendent Michael Kelly will speak on some of these topics and more when he addresses our group at the upcoming annual meeting. Please make plans to attend and invite your colleagues as well.

SOUTH LOOP AUTHOR

SYLVESTER BOYD JR.

James A. Cox, Editor-in-Chief, The Midwest Book Review – September 7, 2014 "Although a work of fiction, it is a story that has deep factual roots in the African American Experience. Superbly crafted from beginning to end, The Road from Money: A Journey to Find Why?– is as thoughtful and thought-provoking as it is solidly entertaining throughout making it very highly recommended for personal reading lists and community library general fiction collections."

The Road from Money is the story of a young African American girl growing up in America's deep South, near the start of the 20th century. The novel is based on the life of the author's Aunt Estella and stories told him by family members over the years. He has woven both fact and fiction into a dynamic portrayal of historical events in the novel; through Estella's journey to find "Why?"

Why? To establish a vision for the future of the Campus and guidelines for implementation of that vision. The Plan will help coordinate new initiatives, programs, operations, and other activities among the multiple institutions, government agencies, and community stakeholders that maintain an interest in the future of the Campus. We value public input and this is the first of several opportunities over the next 6 months. We will shortly launch a project website and digital engagement platform to make it easy for the public to send us their thoughts.

Osprey aircraft deployed for first time in support of Marine One

By CNN's Greg Clary

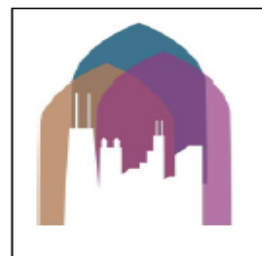

(CNN) – Marine Corps MV-22 Ospreys, aircraft that take off vertically, provided a dramatic new look for President Barack Obama's travel detail as he and the first lady began a Martha's Vineyard vacation on Saturday.

The Ospreys – making their presidential debut - shuttled White House staff, media and Secret Service members from Coast Guard Air Station Cape Cod.

The sleek tilt-rotor aircraft can take off like a helicopter but fly like an airplane.

The Marines say the Ospreys are twice as fast, can travel six times farther and are capable of carrying three times the weight of the Vietnam-era CH-46E helicopters which have supported missions involving the president.

There are no plans yet to have the president fly in the MV-22s.

Creating changes starts with you.... If we want to improve the real estate market place and the economy we have to start with ourselves.

When prices increase in a neighborhood and activity increases we are giving back to the community. As an education teacher and broker in multiple states, my goal is to help agents and their clients navigate and hone in on sales and rental skills. Recently a local professional networking organization had constructed a partnership with local food pantries with non perishable foods left behind after a renter moves out or owners have departed from a dwelling.

Also any clean and recyclable linens, towels, dishes can be donated to hospice or charities rather than tossing them out. Its amazing what is found in garages, and closets after the family has moved. Connecting with a cause that resonates with others and helps bound the real estate market with helping local charities and neighborhoods get us in front in our community and helps the less fortunate. This giving back and thinking of ways to recycle items helps build strong business.

Please use this column to tell your story, if you have run across a story that would help others expand their networking please email it to me at castlebonnie@comcast.net. If you know of re-habbers who recycle building materials and give to others let us know. When we say rebuild it sometimes means items that can be reused and thrown away, and there is a need for all materials, We can supply a list of charities and organizations that would take these waste items and reuse them to help others, from nails to wood trim everything has a purpose and can be recycled. Think of others before throwing away. Castle Keepers is named that because we are keepers of peoples homes and all that can be used within them. Have a profitable month and remember others and recycle.. we can help...312 732 5106 or drop a note off at office street level 729 S. Dearborn or just come in to network.. We are part of the community for 40 years this year and have been participating in its growth and proud of the unity of the area... Forever strong, Chicago helps its neighbor's always has and if we do our part always will.
