Central City High School

At a South Loop Neighbor's (SLN) meeting at Jones College Prep on Oct. 15th, hosted a presentation by Connecting4Communities, a community organization that serves the Tri-Taylor, Little Italy, Roosevelt Square & Brooks Homes, and University Village. Among their pro-active concerns is providing a quality local high school which also mirrors the South Loop's yearning for the same for our students. They have been working on a proposal for a "Central City High School." They have been working with local alderman and CPS. Seven alderman have signed a letter of support including Aldermans Pat Dowell, William Burns and Daniel Solis. Dennis O'Neill, executive director of Connecting4Communities has proposed creating Central City High School in the Roosevelt Square development area, (south of Roosevelt). The School would be at 14th St near Blue Island Ave. about 2 miles west of the South Loop. This high school would guarantee seats for local residents for graduates from seven city grade schools including South Loop Elementary School. This new proposed school would be a District Innovator school and not a charter or contract school. Parents know that when their child reaches the age to go to high school, it is very competitive to gain admittance to one of Chicago's magnet schools. Jones College Prep has two special programs, one for pre-engineering and one for pre-law where our local students can apply for. However, it's not a guaranteed seat. The two charts at the right show a trend where families with children move out of the area when their children reach high school age. Dennis said that with an agreement with CPS and the backing of the alderman, breaking ground on the new high school could happen as early as 2014.

Mariano's has a grand opening in the South Loop; Dominick's closes immediately

I always figured Mariano's would put Dominick's out of business. The head of Mariano's left Dominick's and started Mariano's. Not a good sign. And then I started noticing that wherever Dominick's had a pretty good business, Mariano's opened nearby. It was only a matter of time--and design.

What really surprised me, though, is that after only two days of Mariano's being in business in the South Loop at 16th and Clark, just a stone's throw from Dominick's at Roosevelt and Canal, Dominick's announced it was leaving Chicago. There must be a connection. A final nail in the coffin? Mariano's in the South Loop? Goodbye, Dominick's!

It looks like our very own South Loop Dominick's is going to turn into a Jewel. What this means for the Jewel at Roosevelt and State--across from my house--I do not know. Nor do I particularly care. Because in the South Loop, we have grocery stores up to the eyeballs!

Which wasn't always the case. In fact, when I moved to my house in the South Loop 19 years ago, we barely had any. We had a place called Printers Row Market at 8th and State, which was found--after a thorough television investigation--to be selling meat that was a year old. That sort of thing. My neighbors and I basically got in our cars and went to other neighborhoods to shop.

Until a little before the turn of the last century--when Dominick's opened on Roosevelt in a mall. They had a grand opening. And everyone was all excited. Like the Second Coming. Then in 2001, Jewel came. Then Whole Foods and Target came to Roosevelt Road, too. And Trader Joe's. And Costco opened at 14th and Ashland. (A little too far to be considered the South Loop, but calling itself the South Loop Costco just the same.) And everyone was really excited each and every time. Just like they were on Tuesday, Oct. 8, when Mariano's opened it's doors on 16th Street. In fact, everyone was quite excited when Mariano's had its groundbreaking last year.

As each new store came, they got better. More interesting. More innovative. Anything to capture the imagination of South Loopers--and those passing through the South Loop. And a number of very good smallish specialty groceries opened, too

Mariano's was no different on Tuesday. I had a tour at 11 AM that morning. And it was remarkable, to say the least. For example, they sport a huge wall of shelves full of fresh, obscure spices presented in bulk jars. You want only an ounce of a spice? Because you probably won't use it ever again, and why buy more and let it go to waste? Mariano's will spoon it out for you in the amount you need.

You want good prices for gorgeous bakery products? Wild Gelato flavors, served at a gelato bar? Piano music? They have one in every store. An in-store sing-along for your preschooler? Good wine? The wine buyer dares you to blindfold yourself and pick a bottle--any bottle--and it will be good, he says.

You want to buy a burger or a nice piece of fish and you want it now? Grilled? Take it home or eat it there? They've got a grill going at all times and you can ask them to grill you a brat, a hotdog, a steak, a burger, a piece of salmon, a piece of trout, a portobello mushroom--anything at all--hot and delicious. And quick.

A pint of fresh orange juice is yours for a dollar. A smoothie with kale for a good de-tox is yours for the asking.

How about an 80 pound Hawaiian Opah fish? Or organic scallions for a dollar a bunch? I can't remember them being that low--organic or not. How about an enormous taffy apple made before your very eyes drenched in M&Ms? Or a great cup of espresso--so good some of the South Loop coffee klatch places are already afraid of stiff and deadly competition.

Then there's those pizza Thursday nights (you get a lot for $10). A very authentic sushi bar. A hot bar full of comfort food like spaghetti Bolognese. Full dinners, freshly made for $6 ($10 for steak). You get a free pint glass if you put together two custom made craft beer six packs.

How about two freshly made long French loaves for a dollar?

There's an olive bar, sandwiches galore, tons of gluten-free products, a soup bar with award-winning soups and a flower shop with a horticulturist to design you a lovely vase full. And an International section with the actual flags of the countries hanging from the ceiling, and over the aisle. Not to mention lots of indie vendors. And plenty of free samples.

Add it all up--and you have a cross between Whole Foods and Trader Joe's, with a little bit of Costco, Jewel, Aldi and Target thrown in. Only one thing left to say: Dominick's, you were smart to give up.

Safe & Sound Blog

by Beth Finke

Bethfinke.wordsmith.com

Wanda Bridgeforth is 92 years old and has been attending the memoir-writing class I lead in downtown Chicago for seven years. She grew up in Chicago and her mother worked "in private family," which means Mama lived at the houses she took care of. Wanda lived with one relative one week, a friend the next, and sometimes, with complete strangers.

When I asked writers to describe their favorite plaything as a child, Wanda came back with an essay about her doll, Geneva. Wanda is compiling some of her essays to self-publish as a gift for friends and family this Christmas. I have a feeling this one about Geneva will be included in that collection.

My Favorite Toy by Wanda Bridgeforth

I must have been a really good girl in 1927 because Santa left an ironing board, electric iron, sewing machine and the Effanbee "Rosemary Doll" all of my friends and I had asked for that year.

Her curls and eyelashes were natural hair. Every time I sat her up or laid her down she opened and closed her eyes and said, "MA-MA!!!" That was enough to melt a little girl's heart. Without hesitating I named her Geneva, after my Mama.

In late spring 1928, Dad's company closed their chemistry lab and he was laid off. Mama and I moved into a bedroom with Aunt Gert and Uncle Larry on 51st Street and Dad went to live with Uncle A.S. and his wife at 42nd and Vincennes. Mama showed me how to wash and iron Geneva's dress, panties and bonnet.

Mid summer, Mama went to work "in private family." I abandoned all of my toys except Geneva. She became my confidant and bedfellow. I guess you could say she was my security blanket. I took her everywhere. The kids began to tease me and called me a "big baby," so, when

Local author Beth Finke's books are available at Sandmeyer's

I left home I hid her under the pillow on my bed.

Every Tuesday after school I washed her clothes so she would be nice and clean when Mama came home on Wednesday, her day off. The three of us would sit at the kitchen table and exchange the events of the week. Geneva's clothes were almost faded white.

Christmas 1931, "Cousin Sugar" the lady I was staying with made Geneva a new outfit. Mama and Cousin Sugar assured me the new clothes did not need weekly washing.

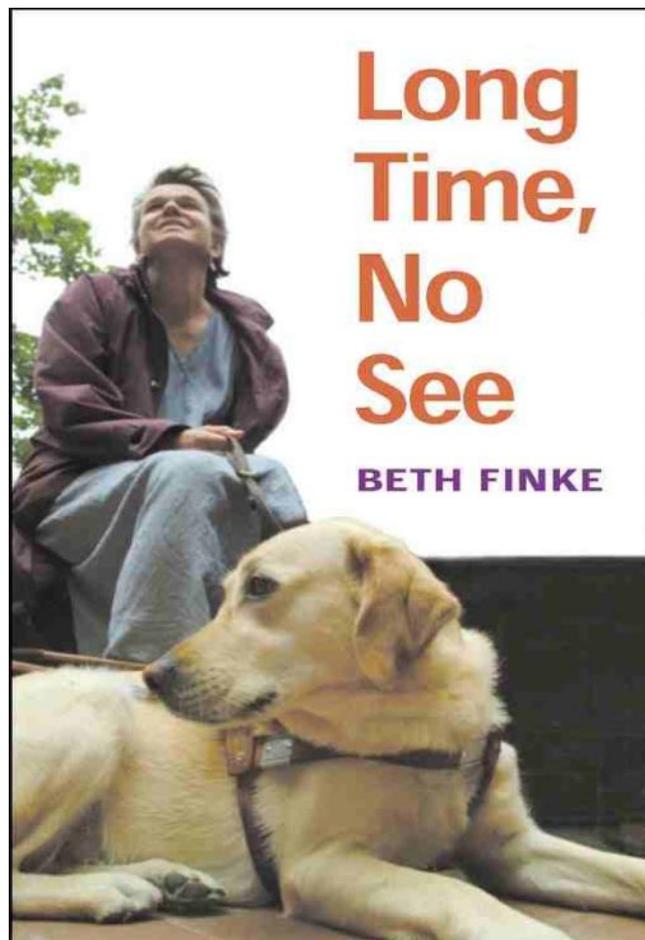

Some of my friends boasted about their dolls made of rubber that could drink milk or water from a tiny bottle with a tiny nipple on it. I looked at Geneva, her mouth was open and she had a space between her lips. I bought a tiny bottle with a tiny nipple on it from Woolworth's 5 & 10 cents store and fed Geneva.

After a while Geneva developed a horrible odor and her body became damp. Cousin Sugar and Mama cut a slit in her body. The straw stuffing had mildew and mold and her plaster body had melted. Only her head was intact. I didn't realize her straw insides absorbed the liquid instead of passing it through like the rubber dolls did.

I was inconsolable. Geneva was DEAD!!!

I decided she must have a funeral. Mr. Brunow, the janitor, dug a grave in the far corner of the back yard. Dressed in our parents black clothes, my friends and I marched behind the Radio Flyer Wagon lined with black crepe paper.

We sang a hymn and sent Geneva, My Favorite Toy, dressed in her Christmas Outfit to live with the Angels.

COOK COUNTY CRIMINAL COURTHOUSE

— A man claiming to be "the bodyguard of all students" is charged with robbery and battery after accosting two Columbia College students, according to court documents. Police said a student was walking in the 1300 block of South Michigan Avenue on Oct. 3 when the man, 50-year-old Cary High, approached him and said he "knows everyone at Columbia College and is the bodyguard of all students." He allegedly asked the student to buy him a sandwich. When the student said he had no money, High accused him of lying and warned him that he would remember him, prosecutors said. A few days later on Oct. 8, the same student encountered High again, prosecutors said. He walked up and said to the student, "Do you remember me? I remember you." High again asked for a sandwich, according to a police report. When the student pulled out a $5 bill, High allegedly responded by demanding all his money. A second student, a 20-year-old woman, encountered High on Sept. 23 in the 600 block of South Wabash Avenue, where he allegedly made a derogatory From DNAINfo.com/Chicago

Two men confronted a Jones College Prep student Sept 25 on the 700 block of South State Street. The men told her to give them her iPhone. The student claimed she did not have one and one man grabbed her before the other swiped her iPhone from her pocket. The thieves ran south on State Street and have yet to be identified.

What's more fun than a Sunday morning summer bike ride through relatively sleepy Chicago streets? The second ward's own version of a critical mass ride—about 100 bicyclists in flaming orange “bike the ward” t-shirts taking over the streets with volunteer escorts to help us motor through major intersections (and a Wacker Drive detour because it had been turned into a movie set for the latest in the Transformers franchise). Second Ward Alderman Bob Fioretti's annual bike the ward on Sunday, September 29, drew riders of all ages for a leisurely ward tour on two wheels that would have made Mary Poppins proud. Bicyclists started and finished at Fairlife Foods in the West Loop. The ward and local businesses provided free t-shirts, a starting line breakfast, a halfway pit stop at Goose Island Brewery, a wrap-up BBQ lunch, a bike check station and goodie bags. Our tour touched all parts of the newly mapped second ward, reaching as far south as the Museum Campus, east to the lake, north to North Avenue and west to Damen.
