Fall Forward

Fall is a great time for new beginnings. August is filled with regrets and anxiety as Summer comes to an end. Like squirrels, we scurry around burying acorns. We try to take advantage of the last free concerts, Fests, and baseball games. The long daylight hours are disappearing. We yearn to eat at the sidewalk café before it there’s a chill in the air. Fall, on the other hand, is the beginning of a lot of things. Schools starts. The Bears growl . . . We hope. Groups you belong to begin to meet again. The Annual Yard Sale in Dearborn Park. One treat for our neighborhood will be in the fall this year, the annual Printers Row Lit Fest. See page 10 for details. A new Neighborhood watch group is forming. Occasionally, violent crime makes its appearance in the neighborhood. What are you going to do about it? See page 6 for a South Loop sponsored event. And as other music fades away like free music at Millennium Park, the Jazz Showcase as been gearing up over the Summer with some great acts, seven days a week. If the Pandemic taught us anything, it’s that we missed a lot of entertainment in past year that we can now treasure and enjoy. You don’t know what you’ve got til it’s gone. Now it’s back.

South Loop Neighbors is a non-profit membership based organization dedicated to enhancing the quality of life in South Loop's neighborhoods and preserving the area's landmark districts. South Loop Neighbors represents South Loop residents who are concerned about:

- Ensuring high-quality, reasonably-sized real estate development as well as infrastructure improvements that respect the unique character of our community
- Preserving and protecting the area's Landmark Districts, including Printing House Row and Historic Michigan Boulevard
- Promoting quality education, recreation, services, retail, community activities, and events
- Maintaining a socially, culturally, and economically diverse neighborhood
- Developing strong relationships with key city officials to ensure they respect, hear, and act on the concerns and ideas of the South Loop community. South Loop Neighbors serves members and residents within the area bounded by Congress Parkway to approximately 25th Street and from the Chicago River to Lake Michigan.

A reader’s observations about the Alden-owned Tribune

By Marianne Goss, August 16, 2021

I kept my daily subscription after the Chicago Tribune was acquired in late May by hedge fund Alden Global Capital, known for decimating newsrooms. Here’s what I’ve noticed about the paper since then:

• There are more op-eds from outside contributors, filling space previously taken by Tribune writers. Longtime columnists like Eric Zorn and Mary Schmich, who were among more than 40 staffers to accept buyouts, are irreplaceable — and indeed, they won’t be replaced, according to Robert Feder, who covers Chicago media on his website, robertfeder.com. Op-eds often come from people who represent organizations whose positions they espouse. Such contributors are not as uninvolved as staff writers, but they know their subjects.

• Rex Huppke has been writing fewer humorous columns (a plus, to my taste) and is holding up the progressive end well now that his liberal colleagues have left. Heidi Stevens and Steve Chapman, among those who departed, are picked up from syndicated services but appear less frequently.

• A lot of stories are imported from Tribune Publishing’s suburban newspapers. Few of them interest me.

• The paper seems thinner even though a letter to readers about a reorganization said, “We’ll still have roughly the same amount of news space dedicated to our journalism.” Feder reported that all of Alden’s newspapers were ordered to trim their local and feature space by 20 percent. The weekday Tribune now has three sections after features vanished as a freestanding section.

• It takes me less time to read the daily paper, maybe because I’m skipping those suburban stories.

I might have dropped my daily subscription of 36 years but for Zorn’s urging readers to stay with the paper to support the journalists who remain. Also, I’d have to figure out what to substitute. I subscribed to the Sun-Times for a while and found it lacking in nonlocal news. PBS NewsHour and WTTW’s Chicago Tonight are excellent, but I’m not sure I want to give them two hours every day. My concentration drifts listening to radio news. With Block Club Chicago, I’d have to find other sources for nonlocal news. Truth is, I’m an old-school newspaper person, liking my news in one place every day, preferably to read rather than listen to.

The exodus of Tribune journalists who feared they’d be pushed out the door if they didn’t quit was tragic, and maybe it’s not over. I miss their consistently solid work but think that the Tribune’s news coverage is still worth a subscription. I may have to look elsewhere for more opinion.

MARKING MY 300TH POST

Almost four years ago, I wrote, “This is my 100th post.” Today I can say that this is my 300th post. Retired in Chicago has been a pleasure to keep up, though I wish that I had chosen a name that better describes its anything-goes content.

Much that I wrote for the 100th post link still applies, so I won’t repeat myself. What might be added is the surprise that finding topics has not been a problem. They seem to spring up on their own. Whatever is on mind becomes fodder for a post.

Judging by the scarcity of comments, I might not think enough about whether what’s on my mind interests others. But in all honesty, after a lifetime of producing words for pay, I’m not thinking much about an audience anymore. This is a self-indulgent affair, helping me to sort out my thoughts, feelings, and opinions. My journal does the same thing, so why use a public forum? It commits me to writing regularly and to composing instead of spewing out words. Also, it must be admitted, I like hearing that someone enjoyed a post.

Looking for a retirement angle for the 100th post, I wrote that retirement advisers say that it’s okay to try out activities and drop them if you find they don’t interest you. I hadn’t been sure when I started blogging whether it would seem like a pleasure or an assignment. “If there’s a message in this post, it’s that sometimes you have to stick with something for a while before you realize it’s going to stick,” I wrote. Three hundred posts over 5½ years is a while — but not so long a while that I don’t want to continue.

Sunday in the Park

When we moved into our condo in Chicago’s Printers Row neighborhood in 2004, there was a mangy little parking lot just to the south of our building, immediately below our window. But a mangy little parking lot was OK. Some of our neighbors bought a place with a view only to have it blocked by new hi-rises. Before we moved here, some developers had proposed a hi-rise on that space, but a group of committed neighborhood residents fought it and won. As a result, our unit still has a nice little view.

In 2009, the Chicago Park District, which bought the mangy lot, combined it with a tiny little plaza to the south that was the site of a decorative fountain. The result: Printers Row Park. In fact, it’s more of a plaza. It’s got benches and a little green space and some greenery and its landscape architecture is a clever homage to the days when the neighborhood was home to printers and adjunct businesses. Plus, the Park District refurbished the fountain—which had seen better days, and that alone was quite an improvement.

The park has always been a welcome addition—on Saturdays in spring, summer and fall, it’s the home of a farmers market. Beth and I have always been regulars at the market, but otherwise, she and I mostly walked by it rather than stop and sit and use it.

Until the pandemic lockdown. Then it became an oasis for us and our friends. With camp chairs and portable tables and maybe a festive beverage or two (it’s technically not allowed in parks), we’d gather for outdoor get togethers. We weren’t alone—groups regularly gathered with lawn chairs—it was a social oasis.

It didn’t stop when winter arrived—more than once we put our down jackets on to meet with friends at the park.

If we got one good thing out of the pandemic, it was a change in habit. Now we regularly use the park for get togethers. For some of us, that’s out of necessity. Two couples have to essentially act as if the lockdown is still on. One friend has two transplanted lungs and a transplanted kidney. He’s vaccinated, but vaccines are less effective in folks like him who take immunosuppressants. The stakes are high, so he and his wife have to be more careful than the likes of me a Beth.

Same goes for another friend, who is being treated for cancer, and her husband.

With very specific exceptions, we only see these people outdoors, and the park is a godsend. Last night was a summer potluck with a gourmet green bean salad, a caprese salad, fresh fruit, cheese, and salami.

Oh, and wine.

Beth was pouring herself a glass of white when one of our friends said, “Uh oh. There are two cops headed straight toward us.”

Beth said out loud, “Oh, I gotta put this away quick...”. As she scrambled to put the bottle back into her bag, one of the officers, a barrel-chested guy, said, quietly, “Not quick enough.” (He seemed to get a chuckle out of it.) But he and his partner walked right by us toward a group of kids who were doing skateboarding tricks on a ramp they’d set up. They were videotaping each other’s feats. The cops politely broke it up. (Lest you think it was heavy handed, there’s a very cool skateboarding park nearby. And the kids use one of the benches as a prop, scraping it up.)

As they walked past us back to their cruiser, the same cop said, “You’re gotta to be quicker next time,” with a smile on his face, and they got in and drove away.

P.S. The Printers Row Fountain needs another round of cosmetic and mechanical restoration. The Printers Row Park Advisory Council, a group of local citizens, is raising money to help with the costs. If you’re a local, or if you just like fountains, you can chip in here.

Hunter Biden, Beautiful Things: a Memoir (Gallery 2021)

“There are plenty of memoirs about the Three Rs (rum, ruin, and redemption), but there are selections in this one that stand out with haunting clarity” observed master-writer Stephen King, upon reading presidential prodigal son Hunter Biden’s Beautiful Things. Hunter’s not wry, nor romantic; there are no shenanigans. Just the compulsion to smoke more, drink more, take more risks. There’s so much crack and so many bottles and lost souls trying to survive: users, dealers, healers, hangers-on—whose lives are so sordid, one reviewer called the book “poverty porn.” Hunter surely makes us glad we’re not them. But we’re not Hunter either, who survives drunken crashes because he only rents luxury cars and funds his sex-and-drug habits with the half-million dollars he makes for sitting on the board of a Ukrainian energy company. Hunter did what all junkies do, but only his redemption matters. He is the hub, rather than a cog, in the addiction machine that claims members of nearly half of all American families. As Joe Biden said on TV: “My son, my son, my son — like a lot of people, like a lot of people you know at home — had a drug problem...he’s fixed it, he’s worked on it. And I’m proud of him.” Hunter craves absolution, and perhaps he gets it without any real confession. But Hunter’s story is not just about excess and privilege. It’s about pain and loss, the kind many of us know. His writing here is beautiful, touching, believable. Hunter’s mother and baby sister died in a crash that put 4-year-old Hunter and his slightly-older brother side-by-side in a dark hospital room, wondering whether they, too, would die—realizing from that point on, the best they had was each other. The brothers never asked each other what they remembered, and “it almost felt like a betrayal to say we missed our mom.” “We were inseparable, people referred to us as “Beauandhunt.” “We double-dated, even for the prom.” Hunter’s beloved brother, Beau, tellingly, the first half of the conjoined moniker, was sober, successful, heroic and political. During most of Beau’s struggle with cancer, Beauandhunter remained together. “I love you, I love you, I love you”—they’d always said to each other. When Beau was dying, Hunter prayed, but “hoping for a miracle is an oxymoron. It takes a kind of dogged compartmentalizing to divorce yourself from rational thought.” Hunter was good at abandoning reason, but he hung on to his heart.

A new novel by local author, Paul Wcisel (paulwcisel.com)

In a remote corner of northern Michigan, the residents of Leelanau County have a secret society that has been living on the peninsula for thousands of years. They are the bear-transforming descendants of tribes who crossed Lake Michigan millennia ago to escape the destruction of their clan.

One evening, a traveler has a chance encounter with a spirit bear and discovers he has a hidden history of his own. In the months that follow, he becomes deeply involved with the Sleeping Bear Clan and — depending on your point of view — a murder.

The Chicago Public Library (CPL) has asked me to lead a free four-part virtual memoir-writing workshop, and the first class starts Tuesday, September 14 at 2 pm central time, and then at 2 pm every Tuesday up to and including October 5, 2021. You don’t have to be a Chicago resident to register, anyone anywhere can attend – we’re meeting via Zoom. The four-part CPL workshop is intended for people who are just starting to think about memoir-writing and will be much different than the weekly memoir-writing classes I’ve been leading all these years. Rather than giving assignments, editing, and asking workshop participants to read 500-word essays out loud in class, I plan on focusing the four-part CPL workshop on the merits and process of writing memoir … and ways to get started. Here’s an excerpt from the description on the Chicago Public Library site:

Award-winning author, journalist and teacher, Beth Finke teaches the craft of memoir and first-person narratives in this four-part writing workshop, answering common questions about getting started, the difference between autobiography and memoir, exposing family secrets, using pen names and pseudonyms, writer’s block, researching, organizing your work, self-publishing and working with publishers. A fun and easy-going workshop to discover ways friends, family, celebrations, milestones, moments and place can be catalysts for unlocking memories and uncovering stories.

Chicago Public Library will provide us with 75 minutes on Zoom each week, but it’s unlikely classes will last that long — the plan is for me to start each week with a short talk, then open up to discussion, questions and comments from participants.

Want to attend? Register here and you will receive an email with a link to the secure Zoom meeting about 24 hours before each meeting. Zoom you there!

When thinking about common threads in this fall arts season, a fall arts season like none that have come before, the pandemic and its effects were obvious. What stood out, though, was the number of institutions that have undergone major transitions in leadership or even transformations that involve not only changes in management but in some cases new spaces or even a fundamental rethinking of how things are done. We decided to take an in-depth look at this phenomenon for our Fall Arts Preview and interviewed leaders in eight different cultural categories. In every case, the transformations are moving organizations in new and better directions.

In addition to those longer features, we offer twenty-four can’t-miss events, in the form of eight lists, for the fall. It feels great just to write that.

Thanks to the return of live theater, dance, comedy and opera, we’re bringing back a standalone dance section in this issue. As productions start to open, we’ll be reviewing them at NewcityStage.com; please visit Newcity.com and sign up for our daily newsletter, Newcity Today, or our weekly Stage Letter if you’d like us to let you know when we publish them. See you at the show.

A huge thank you to the 4th Ward Alderman’s office and to the Department of Streets and Sanitation. The rat problem in Printers Row Park is now being fully addressed. I spoke with Josie Cruz at S&S this morning. She sent a crew out and they killed 13 large rats this morning. The crew baited the holes and covered them over. It is now up to all of us to encourage the restaurants in Printers Row to improve trash pickup schedules. Those dumpsters filled with discarded food or food containers are what is attracting the rat population. We all want to be rid of the rats so we have to stop attracting them. We need everyone’s help in this effort.

Thank You! Thank You! Thank You! To the 4th Ward Alderman’s office and to Streets and Sanitation for your assistance in this effort.

"Save the Fountain" at Printers Row Park

Fountains beautify cities and make them more livable, peaceful, and inviting. They soften the edges of the steel and concrete, and they help the passersby slow down the hustle and bustle of their busy lives.

The Printers Row Park Advisory Council (PAC) needs your help! Almost a quarter of a century old, the Fountain at Printers Row Park is in serious need of restoration, above and below ground. Help us replace its colored enamel reliefs and polish its bronze highlights, upgrade its lighting, repair its pump and pipes so that this unique civic treasure can, once again, gush forth with its original energy and spirit.

In total, we need to raise $110,000 to complete the restoration by the spring of 2022. We requested and are awaiting approval from the Chicago Park District for $35,000 towards the project. Our 4th Ward Alderperson, Sophia King, has not only agreed to provide $35,000 towards the restoration but has also agreed to match dollar-for-dollar up to $10,000 in donations that we receive!

That leaves Printers Row PAC to fundraise $40,000! Please contribute whatever you can to support the South Loop community in bringing the Fountain at Printers Row Park back to its original glory! Visit the fountain before and after the restoration so that you can appreciate the significance of this project. Specializing in Printer’s Row Properties
My September 11, 2001 Timeline

It was early on a Tuesday morning, and my routine was to get up early on Tuesday mornings to put the finishing touches on my weekly column in the Chicago Daily Law Bulletin before emailing it to my editor. He needed time to look it over before it was time to print and deliver the paper to lawyers’ offices and courthouses all over the Chicago area that afternoon. The difference on the Tuesday morning of September 11, 20 years ago, was that my good friend Wendy was staying with me. I’d separated from my husband, and she from her long-time boyfriend several weeks before and I invited Wendy to move in until she found a place of her own in the neighborhood—which she did, and we’ve been neighbors ever since.

Wendy liked getting up really early and watching The Today Show while relaxing and drinking coffee in my family room recliner. And that’s where she was that morning. As I sat across the room working on my column.

And then it happened. “Look, a plane hit a building in New York,” she said. I walked over to get a better look at the TV. I figured it was a private plane with a pilot who was sick, maybe having a stroke or a dizzy spell or a stomach ache or some such. And I said something very prescient: “Life will never be the same.”

I figured a wayward private pilot making a mistake like this and hitting the World Trade Center sure would change private aviation in the country and we’d never be the same because of it.

Little did I know.

And then the rest happened.

And life was never the same.

We watched all the horror. I called my editor and I asked if the paper was going to come out that afternoon. “Are you sure you want to run the column, after what’s just happened?” I asked. My column was known to be rather wry; I reported on social events that lawyers and judges went to and I made light fun of it all. And I got into a little trouble now and then.

He said the paper would come out, and my column would run. And to send it over. And it might even come out early because everyone was leaving downtown as we spoke.

And boy, were they leaving downtown. CTA and Metra were packed to the gills. With very nervous people, they explained on the news. People were scurrying away and heading home in every direction. Heading back to where they’d started that morning, so crowded that it would all go down in history.

Wendy sat in the recliner and called a close friend in New York who lived not too far from the Word Trade Center and I got on the phone, too, and we grilled her about what it was like—like the air, was it filled with dust? (Yes, and so was her house.) Were people scurrying home like they were in downtown Chicago? (Yes, and they were covered in dust, too.)

And then I said another weird thing: “I bet the Iraqis did it.”

Why did I say that? Why did that slip out so easily? My mother said later that day that she read in the paper about a month before that this was going to happen and that it had been in an intelligence report.

She was right. A big newspaper saver, I went though some old ones and found the small article buried in the news section.

And at some point I figured out that warmonger Dick Cheney knew this would likely happen, and he’d have a great excuse to turn it into an opportunity to get at the greatest oil reserve left in the world. And I figured he was probably sending subliminal messages via his news conferences and newspaper interviews about the Iraqis being terrorists. And I must have picked up on it subliminally. I satisfied myself with that explanation when we went to Iraq two years later to avenge what happened that day.

Then Wendy got a call from her bank. They had been wanting her to come in and straighten out a signature related to a safe deposit box. Something minor, and she’d been putting it off. Did she want to come in now?

I told her to go. “There’s no traffic, no one will be at the bank, you’ll get this whole errand off your mind real quick,” I said. “Just go.”

“But,” she said.

But she went. And she was glad when she got back in no time. No cars on the street, no people at the bank. The errand was off her mind just as I’d predicted.

Then my soon to be ex-husband came by to visit our daughter. He was mesmerized by the course of the day. When he left, he was as pale as when he arrived.

One of his jobs was photographer for the CDLB (sometimes he was assigned to take pictures to accompany my column) and he’d had to get his work over there earlier that day, too. And we talked about how creepy it was that the everyday fruits of our labor would be appearing momentarily on the street just like nothing ever happened.

When he left, my neighbor from down the street, my good friend Susan, a psychiatrist came over.

Susan was often invited to what we called “drug dinners” that her husband didn’t like to go to with her—so she would always invite me. These were very fancy dinners in very fancy places paid for by drug companies that wanted psychiatrists to be prescribing their psychotropic drugs for their patients. Over a lot of great food, they would give a talk about some technical subject regarding mental illnesses and their treatments, which I, the possessor of two degrees in public health, always enjoyed very much.

And boy, were they leaving downtown. CTA and Metra were packed to the gills. With very nervous people, they explained on the news. People were scurrying away and heading home in every direction. Heading back to where they’d started that morning, so crowded that it would all go down in history.

Wendy sat in the recliner and called a close friend in New York who lived not too far from the Word Trade Center and I got on the phone, too, and we grilled her about what it was like—like the air, was it filled with dust? Why did I say that? Why did that slip out so easily? My mother said later that day that she read in the paper about a month before that this was going to happen and that it had been in an intelligence report.

She was right. A big newspaper saver, I went though some old ones and found the small article buried in the news section.

And at some point I figured out that warmonger Dick Cheney knew this would likely happen, and he’d have a great excuse to turn it into an opportunity to get at the greatest oil reserve left in the world. And I figured he was probably sending subliminal messages via his news conferences and newspaper interviews about the Iraqis being terrorists. And I must have picked up on it subliminally. I satisfied myself with that explanation when we went to Iraq two years later to avenge what happened that day.

Then Wendy got a call from her bank. They had been wanting her to come in and straighten out a signature related to a safe deposit box. Something minor, and she’d been putting it off. Did she want to come in now?

I told her to go. “There’s no traffic, no one will be at the bank, you’ll get this whole errand off your mind real quick,” I said. “Just go.”

“But,” she said.

But she went. And she was glad when she got back in no time. No cars on the street, no people at the bank. The errand was off her mind just as I’d predicted.

Then my soon to be ex-husband came by to visit our daughter. He was mesmerized by the course of the day. When he left, he was as pale as when he arrived.

One of his jobs was photographer for the CDLB (sometimes he was assigned to take pictures to accompany my column) and he’d had to get his work over there earlier that day, too. And we talked about how creepy it was that the everyday fruits of our labor would be appearing momentarily on the street just like nothing ever happened.

When he left, my neighbor from down the street, my good friend Susan, a psychiatrist came over.

Susan was often invited to what we called “drug dinners” that her husband didn’t like to go to with her—so she would always invite me. These were very fancy dinners in very fancy places paid for by drug companies that wanted psychiatrists to be prescribing their psychotropic drugs for their patients. Over a lot of great food, they would give a talk about some technical subject regarding mental illnesses and their treatments, which I, the possessor of two degrees in public health, always enjoyed very much.

36th Printers Row Lit Fest

Printers Row Lit Fest, the largest free outdoor literary showcase in the Midwest, returns for its 36th year with 100% free programming for book lovers the weekend after Labor Day, Saturday, Sept. 11 and Sunday, Sept. 12 from 10 a.m.-6 p.m. daily in Chicago’s historic Printers Row neighborhood.

Two-time Pulitzer Prize winner and National Book Award winner Colson Whitehead—author of The Underground Railroad and The Nickel Boys—will appear on the closing day of this year’s festival and discuss his new book Harlem Shuffle in a conversation with Dr. Ivy Wilson.

This event is presented by the American Writers Museum on Sunday, Sept. 12 at 4 p.m. with 400 pre-signed copies of Harlem Shuffle provided to attendees in advance of the book’s publication date, with the support of the Joseph and Bessie Feinberg Foundation. Advance registration is required, and all attendees must show proof of vaccination with a valid photo ID on site. Unvaccinated individuals will not be admitted to this event. Registration opens to the public on Friday, August 27 at 10 a.m. at https://www.eventbrite.com/e/colson-whitehead-harlem-shuffle-tickets-166213510083. No other festival events require advance registration.

Award-winning journalist and novelist Dawn Turner will open the festival in a conversation about her new memoir Three Girls from Bronzeville: A Uniquely American Memoir of Race, Fate, and Sisterhood, on Saturday, Sept. 11 at 10 a.m. Previously announced festival headliner Ta-Nehisi Coates is no longer able to travel to Chicago for the festival.

Wintrust is the major program sponsor for Printers Row Lit Fest. As in past years, the festival presents 100% free programming and includes blocks of diverse booksellers—with old, new, rare and hard-to-find literary treasures offered rain or shine in tents stretching out over five blocks of Dearborn Street in Chicago’s historic Printers Row neighborhood. Special programs include: a BookTok panel, exploring the growing influence of popular book reviewers and content creators on TikTok; events commemorating the 20th anniversary of 9/11 and the 150th anniversary of the Great Chicago Fire; and dozens of events with national and local award-winning authors.

The 36th Printers Row Lit Fest takes place on Saturday, Sept. 11 and Sunday, Sept. 12 from 10 a.m.-6 p.m. daily, in Chicago’s historic Printers Row neighborhood along Dearborn Street from Polk Street north to Ida B. Wells Drive. All festival programs are free and open to the public. For more information and the most up-to-date programming details, visit printersrowlitfest.org.

Printers Row Lit Fest is produced and created by the Near South Planning Board, with major programming support from Wintrust and significant support from the Robert R. McCormick Foundation. Additional sponsors include Alphawood Foundation, American Writers Museum, Joseph and Bessie Feinberg Foundation, Sourcebooks, Better, BritBox, Poetry Foundation, Chicago Public Library, 4th Ward Alderman Sophia King, Grace Place, Hotel Blake, 3L Living and Hilton Chicago. Media partners include WBEZ Chicago, Hyde Park Herald, Chicago Sun-Times, Chicago Reader and Newcity.

HEALTH AND SAFETY PROTOCOLS

All attendees at Printers Row Lit Fest are encouraged to wear masks when not actively eating or drinking. Printers Row Lit Fest is monitoring the latest CDC and City of Chicago guidelines and will follow all requirements to ensure the health and safety of its guests, staff and artists.

For programs hosted inside tents and indoor venues, masks will be required and guests over the age of 12 are required to show proof of vaccination or a negative COVID test result within the last 48 hours, along with a valid photo ID. Unmasked children will not be allowed in program tents or indoor venues.

The Colson Whitehead event on Sunday, Sept. 12, requires advance registration and all guests must show proof of vaccination with a valid photo ID. Unvaccinated individuals will not be admitted to this event.
Chicago Cubs fans always will remember the beloved 1969 team, yet the 1970 Cubs are, in many ways, more fascinating. Author William S. Bike tells their story in his latest book, The Forgotten 1970 Chicago Cubs: Go and Glow, which will be available from The History Press on May 17, 2021.

"In 1970, the Cubs added interesting characters like Joe Pepitone and Milt Pappas to the legendary nucleus of Billy Williams, Ron Santo, and Ernie Banks," Bike said. "The team came closer to finishing first than in any year between 1945 and 1984—ending the season only five games out in one of baseball's hottest three-team pennant races ever."

Offering a fast-paced look at the season month by month, Bike moves beyond wins, losses, and statistics to relive Ernie Banks's 500th home run, the addition of "the basket" to the outfield walls, good trades and bad trades, how manager Leo Durocher's radio show caused clubhouse chaos, death threats against third baseman Ron Santo, outfielders Billy Williams's and Jim Hickman's best season, the great Cubs pitching rotation, and statistical and computer analyses of how the Eastern Division Cubs would have done playing in the Western Division—and in the playoffs and World Series.

The Forgotten 1970 Chicago Cubs: Go and Glow, published by The History Press of Charleston, SC, is available at Amazon.com, in bookstores, and at https://www.arcadiapublishing.com/Products/9781467149082
Chicago Rolls Out Mental Health Emergency Teams To Reduce Police

CHICAGO — The city’s 911 call center is now being staffed with a mental health professional as part of an effort to stop relying solely on police to respond to Chicagoans experiencing mental health emergencies.

The Crisis Assistance Response and Engagement program, or CARE, started on a limited basis this week, focusing on two parts of the city with the highest number of mental health emergency calls. One team of responders will work in Uptown, North Center and Lakeview, and the second will service Auburn Gresham and Chatham.

Those teams include a police officer trained in crisis intervention, a paramedic and a mental health professional. The police officer will be in plainclothes, and the teams respond to calls in a white van designed not to look like police cruisers or ambulances. The vans will be marked with a logo, but it’s still being developed.

Two more teams will start later this year, and both will work without officers.

The pilot was created through the 2021 budget process with an initial $3.5 million investment.

Progressive aldermen led by Ald. Rossana Rodriguez-Sanchez (33rd) pushed the city to stop using armed first responders in mental health emergencies and invest in mental health response teams in response to calls for cities to defund police departments last year. Mayor Lori Lightfoot initially balked at the idea, instead favoring a limited co-responder model that included police officers.

Eventually, Lightfoot approved of the hybrid pilot program to test both models.

Officials with Lightfoot’s office and the Chicago Department of Public Health detailed the program during a hearing of the Committee on Health and Human Relations on Wednesday. North Side alderman also hosted a webinar to introduce it to residents.

“These are calls that as of right now are responded to by our police, but they may arguably take the skills that go beyond what our average officer has to offer,” said Ald. Scott Waguespack (32nd).

The first phase of the two-year pilot, which began Monday, will roll out slowly, a Lightfoot spokesperson said in a statement.

“In order to ensure the safety of staff and individuals in need of assistance, the launch of this team will be phased over the next three weeks,”

In American Epidemic: Guns in the United States, nine artists examine the role guns play in structural violence, poverty, systemic racism, and an increasingly militarized police force. Using the photographic medium, these artists provide a nuanced exploration of the way in which guns are yielded in this country, including the politicization of trauma, public mourning (and the rote political refrain of “thoughts and prayers” in response to gun violence), and a host of other issues laid bare by this uniquely American plight. Featuring work by Carolyn Drake, Nancy Floyd, Stephen Foster, Andres Gonzalez, Félix González-Torres, Zora J. Murff, Renée Stout, and Hank Willis Thomas and Kambui Olujimi, American Epidemic not only explores the complex array of issues that arise with the increased presence of guns in American society, but advocates for an intersectional understanding of how gender, race, capitalism, and militarism affect the larger conversation around gun control in this country.

The Black Lives Matter movement: What’s next?

Editor’s note: This article is one in a series of stories from the Communication Department’s award-winning Echo magazine, featured this summer on the Chronicle site.

The Black Lives Matter movement began with a hashtag on social media in July 2013. By June 2020, after the killing of George Floyd and other Black people at the hands of police officers, it became one of the largest social justice movements in U.S. history.

Social justice activists in Chicago continue to advocate for their city and community to ensure the impact of the Black Lives Matter protests and rallies that took place during the summer of 2020 do not fizzle out.

Kobi Guillory, co-chair of the Chicago Alliance Against Racism and Political Repression, and Caullen Hudson, founder of SoapBox Productions and Organizing, are two of the many people working to keep the movement in conversation and moving forward. These interviews were edited for length and clarity.

Then

My mindset was, ‘We have to get out on the streets.’ People are angry. People are going to be out on the streets when something like that happens. It was the same thing when Michael Brown was killed, when Laquan McDonald was killed, when Tamir Rice was killed. We need to make our voices heard and tell whatever power structure that this is not going to go on forever [that] the police are not going to keep killing us forever.

[Chicago] handled it exactly how we expected them to. That first protest on May 30, we had actually been planning that for a few weeks. It was originally supposed to be about freeing torture survivors, but before then, George Floyd was killed on camera, it went viral and there were protests everywhere. Our protest grew far beyond what we were expecting it to be. We were expecting a couple hundred people and it turned out to about 20,000 people. Click link for rest of the story.

3 New Towers With More Than 1,000 Housing Units Greenlighted For Wabash In Loop And South Loop

The projects would bring homes and retail to 525 S. Wabash Ave. and 1400 S. Wabash Ave. The Plan Commission signed off on the plans Thursday.

SOUTH LOOP — Two development projects in the South Loop and Loop that will bring a combination of retail stores, residential units and a hotel were OK’d at a key city meeting Thursday.

The projects would the housing and retail to 525 S. Wabash Ave. and 1400 S. Wabash Ave. The Plan Commission signed off on the plans Thursday.

Developer Eterra Plus plans to transform the parking structure at 525 S. Wabash Ave. into two towers — 24 and 36 stories — connected by a two-story retail space with room for parking. One tower would hold 777 residential units while another would have a 407-room hotel.

A grocer would move into the ground-level storefront and a restaurant would take the space above it. Designs also call for the expansion of an alleyway east of the structure to accommodate loading.

The $350 million project would create 78 affordable housing units, with 39 studios, 26 one-bedrooms, six two-bedrooms and seven three-bedrooms. It would create 400 temporary construction jobs and 200 permanent jobs, and developers would contribute $3.65 million to the Neighborhood Opportunity Fund.

The project is set to be completed by 2024 if it gets full city approval.

Farther down on Wabash, a vacant lot is set to be developed into another residential building with retail at 1400 S. Wabash Ave.

The plan calls for a 31-story, 205-foot building that would cost just under $100 million and have 299 residential units.

The development would create 30 affordable units, but only eight of them would be on-site. Three of those units would be studios, with two one-bedrooms and three two-bedrooms. Rents would be $1,500-$2,700.

Retail space would be on the building’s ground floor, and it would have 185 parking spaces.

The project would create 500 temporary construction jobs, and developers said they plan to partner with a minority general contractor. An apprentice program would allow community youth to get 3,000 hours of training. The Neighborhood Opportunity Fund would receive $1.8 million.

Ald. Pat Dowell (3rd) has signaled her support for the project, saying there has been no “negative feedback” from residents.

The building is to be completed by 2023.

A person died Friday after making contact with the third rail of the Red Line tracks on the Near South Side, fire officials said.

Chicago Fire Department officials found the person dead about 11:25 p.m. on the CTA Red Line tracks at the Roosevelt CTA station near State Street, fire officials said.

Fire officials could not provide the person’s age or gender.

Red line trains were temporarily suspended, but were running with residual delays by about 1:45 a.m., according to CTA’s Twitter account.

We had one scheduled that night and she’d heard from the drug company and they were going through with it. And because many people couldn’t get to town or back to town in time to attend due to all the transportation problems caused by grounded planes, they told her to bring any other guests she wanted. So she invited Wendy to go with us.

And off we went.

It was at a downtown hotel and there was a much smaller crowd than usual—but that gave everyone a chance to talk a bit more intimately with others while eating dinner. We heard a lot of stories about how people they knew were stranded all over the country and they felt so lucky that they weren’t.

The compulsory lecture was brief as it was apparent no one was able to concentrate. Or care.

There was so much extra food that they gave us a lot to take home, which was very fortunate under the circumstances. We were glad to take provisions because who knew what would be available in the stores? Or if they’d be open.

The three of us had walked to the dinner and we also walked back, a couple of miles each way. And we all agreed we’d never seen the city or the sky so dark. And quiet.

There was no one on the street except us. We were shocked at the complete lack of sound downtown, exclaiming that we never realized how much light and noise was provided by regular air traffic across the sky. We’d taken it for granted and gotten used to it all these years.

As we carried our food home—steaks, salads, vegetables, desserts—in our bags, we made small talk about how dead, and how ethereal the streets were, wondering how long this darkness would last.

We had no idea.

And we still don’t. Bonnie McGrath
Another man injured in road rage shooting near Grant Park

September 5, 2021 CWBChicago Loop

Then, around 11:45 p.m., a 28-year-old man was shot as he drove on the 600 block of South Michigan, police said. The man lost control of his car and crashed into a light pole after he was shot, according to police. He suffered one gunshot wound to his left foot and was taken to Stroger Hospital for treatment.

He described the gunman as a Black male wearing a white hoodie who was traveling inside a white vehicle.

No arrests have been made in the second shooting.

There have been 20 people shot in the Loop so far this year. That compares to 18 shooting victims for the entire year of 2020. Only three people were shot in the Loop during 2019, and prosecutors deemed two of those to be self-defense.
