Flavio Gentile

Last Wednesday night, I was busy cooking for Thanksgiving when we got a text from our friend Cami: "FYI, Flavio passed away today." As simple and straightforward as it was, it took a minute to process: Do I know more than one Flavio? For Flavio Gentile was too young (fifty-one), vibrant and present to die. But apparently he took ill a couple of weeks ago, a day after attending a Bears game, seemingly with the flu. By the end of the week he was in the hospital fighting a losing battle against sepsis. He left behind a wife, two young daughters, and his other baby, the Printers Row Wine Bar & Shop.

I did not know Flavio well enough to be considered a good friend, but I felt a different kind of bond built out of time and consistency. Over the arc of his career, we had hundreds of conversations, forming the kind of long-term relationship that is rare in contemporary life, one of friendly shopkeeper and regular customer. Printers Row Pharmacy opened on Dearborn Street not long after Jan and I moved to the area in 1985; a few years later, Flavio's father Michael, who'd run Gentile Pharmacy on Taylor Street since 1963, taking it over from his father, purchased the shop on our street as another location. Over time, the drugstore started offering a robust selection of wine, the influence of Michael's son Flavio. Eventually, as son once again took over for father, the son decided he'd rather sell vino than vaccines, and he transformed the space into Printers Row Wine Shop in 2004. Three years ago, he added a wine bar, the charming Lee Gusman joined him as manager, and business flourished like never before.

Flavio booked musical acts and poetry readings but more than anything created a place where locals and visitors alike could spend hours in convivial conversation. Flavio exuded gioia di vivere. I will never forget warm summer nights on the wine bar's patio when Flavio would join us for a break, puffing on a cigar and contagious in his contentment.

A Neighborhood Grieves

In 2002, our son Gus moved away from our home in Urbana to a group home in Wisconsin and Beth and I became empty nesters. In 2003 the weekly paper I edited folded and I was out of a job. That spring, Beth's book, "Long Time No See," would be published. I got a gig up north and Beth thought it'd be easier to promote her book if we lived in Chicago.

We both grew up in the suburbs but had never lived in the city. And so, we ended up in the Printers Row neighborhood that we've grown to love. We were drawn to its central location—multiple expressways, bus lines and L stops converge here. And back then, before Uber and Lyft, you could count on catching a cab within a minute or two.

More than that, the place felt like Bedford Falls nestled in a bustling metropolis. It still lives like a small town. Plus, we've always been drawn to places where Beth and her Seeing Eye dog could function and get stuff done independently. And Printers Row fit the bill. A bank was just down the street. Even nearer there was Sandmeyer's Book Store, Kasey's Tavern, and a little old-fashioned pharmacy/convenience store. I mean, that's life right there.

Flavio, the proprietor of the pharmacy, was a keen entrepreneur, and he decided to transform the pharmacy into a wine shop/liquor store. (He came by his entrepreneurial spirit honestly.) We were concerned at first about losing a business we liked, but we weren't hurting for drug stores, as CVS and Walgreens stores had popped up everywhere.

We needn't have been worried. Flavio divided the space, leased out half, and turned the other half into a warm, intimate, friendly space. He stocked wines at multiple price points and he had a knack for finding delicious bottles at very approachable prices. And if you needed a recommendation, you need only tell him the occasion and the menu and you'd walk out with a winner.

On Friday evenings Printers Row Wine Shop hosted wine tastings. They became a regular destination for lots of folks in the neighborhood. That popularity sparked Flavio to convert the tasting bar into a bar-bar, and hence a business within a business was born.

It's still a retail store. While people sit and sip and converse in an extremely civilized environment—wood floors, tin ceiling, and conversation-level background music—others stroll in and out, picking up a bottle of wine for a dinner party, or beer for the weekend.

Beth and I thank our lucky stars for the people and places that make Printers Row Printers Row. Ellen Sandmeyer and her late and one-of-a-kind husband Ulrich. Totto's Market. Sofi restaurant and Senoritas Cantina in our building. The folks at Kasey's Tavern. Jazz Showcase. Half Sour. And Flavio and the great staff at Printers Row Wine.

These places are businesses, yes. But because of the care and attention of their proprietors, and their care and attention to their customers, these businesses become characters in the lives of we who live in Printers Row.

The neighborhood lost Ulrich Sandmeyer a few years back. And, I'm heartbroken to report that we lost Flavio last week. Suddenly, unexpectedly, and given that he was an extremely vital 51, entirely too soon.

He leaves behind his wife and two daughters, the oldest of whom just started high school. A large, tight-knit family and a plethora of good friends—many of whom we met at the shop—are coming together to support Flavio's family and each other.

Still, our hearts ache for them.

And, of course, we'll miss him. He reminded me of my grandfather on my mother's side. Paolo Latini immigrated from Italy and worked in the coal mines of southwestern Pennsylvania. By the time I knew him he was retired, had black lung, and wore straw hats with green visors and sprayed pesticide on his perfect garden just like Marlon Brando did in The Godfather.

He kinda scared me when I was little. And then I got to know him and realized that inside his gruff self was a heart of marshmallow.

I was fortunate enough to see Flavio with his family and to hear him talk about his daughters to know that the perfectionist shopkeeper had my grandfather's soft and giving heart.

It's hard for we and our Printers Row neighbors to fathom this loss—there's been too much loss this year.

When Ulrich Sandmeyer passed away, the neighborhood mourned the loss of a friend and, selfishly, worried that the beloved book store that has anchored the neighborhood for decades would be no more.

We needn't have fretted. The tiny but mighty Ellen Sandmeyer has it going strong.

The staff at Printers Row Wine is devastated. And committed to maintaining the neighborhood spot just as Flavio would have. His heart beats there and his blood runs through that place.

And the neighborhood is the better for it. Godspeed, Flavio.

Retired in Chicago

So what if I'm a middlebrow?

By Marianne Goss,

A couple of novels my book group recently read have me thinking about my preference for plain, direct writing.

The latest was Ocean Vuong's On Earth We're Briefly Gorgeous, a semi-autobiographical novel by a gay Vietnamese immigrant in the guise of a letter to his illiterate mother.

Widely praised by critics, On Earth We're Briefly Gorgeous was applauded by most of our book group too.

I welcomed Vuong's topic of the immigrant experience, admired his raw honesty, and was saddened by his characters' struggles. However, I thought the language overshadowed the story, and it often lost me. Vuong, who is a poet, writes poetry-like prose. Sentences such as "A page, turning, is a wing lifted with no twin, and therefore no flight," left me wondering, "Huh?"

If this comes across as criticism of Vuong, that's not the intent. I'm thinking about my own inadequacy. Although I'm a so-called word person, my appreciation for writing has limits. The direct, explicit, simple style of newspaper journalism, where I started my career, is also my preference in fiction. I dislike writing that calls attention to itself. I want to understand what an author is saying without having to reread.

What's wrong with that? Nothing, if this were just about personal taste, but ego comes into play. I'm doubting that I have the capacity to understand lofty language or the diligence to try. If the comparison were just between Hemingway's simplicity and Faulkner's complexity, I could choose Hemingway without feeling intellectually inferior. But lyrical, figurative language — the opposite of my preferences — is usually assumed to be the pinnacle of literary writing.

My favorite book is Harper Lee's To Kill a Mockingbird, which Flannery O'Connor dismissed as a children's book, and Francine Prose derided as an example of books taught in school that are responsible for students not learning to read closely. Sure, it lands at the top of most-loved-books lists, but popularity is synonymous with middlebrow.

So I'm a middlebrow. How much do I care? Not enough to challenge myself to aim higher. If ever I had intellectual pretensions, in the eighth decade of my life it's time to shed them. I don't expect to comprehend economic theories or quantum physics; why must I comprehend all literature?

It comes down to personal preference after all. What I like will determine my fiction reading, especially at the time of life when enjoyment can be unapologetically chosen over challenge. The exception will be in the book group, which ought not be hamstrung by my taste. I'll read whatever the majority wants — and admit my problems with a book. It will be helpful to remember that while my reaction to On Earth We're Briefly Gorgeous exposed my intellectual limits, it also spurred part of a good discussion. Shedding intellectual pretensions can have positive consequences

THE DIVIDED DIAL

Episode 1: The True Believers

In 2016, Christian talk radio host Eric Metaxas begrudgingly encouraged his listeners to vote for then-presidential candidate Donald Trump. By 2020, he pledged his life to fighting the "stolen election" while talking with Trump on the air. Ahead of the midterm elections, Metaxas and many of his fellow talk radio hosts made sure the falsehood of massive 2020 election fraud was top of mind — on the airwaves and beyond. And while election-denying candidates didn't do as well as many on the right had hoped, at least 170 such candidates have been elected to state and national offices, some of whom will be in charge of future elections. We meet the company whose hosts never backed down from the lies of the stolen 2020 election: Salem Media Group, the largest Christian, conservative multimedia company in the country — and perhaps the most influential media company you've never heard of.

Episode 2: From Pulpit to Politics

How did the little-known Salem Media Group come to have an outsized political influence? In this episode we trace the company's rise to power from its scrappy start in the 1970s to the present day — a growth that paralleled and eventually became inextricable from the growth of the Religious Right. We learn that Salem is tightly networked with right wing political strategists, pollsters, big donors, far right leaders and Republican party mainstays thanks to their involvement with the Council for National Policy — a secretive group of Evangelical and conservative leaders. For decades, the CNP has been working behind the scenes to get a specific, highly influential subset of voters to act. And Salem has been a megaphone for their cause.

The Divided Dial is hosted by journalist and Fulbright Fellow Katie Thornton. Her written articles and audio stories have appeared in The Atlantic, 99% Invisible, The Washington Post, BBC, NPR, WNYC, Minnesota Public Radio, The Guardian, Bloomberg's CityLab, National Geographic, and others.

Wanda's Stories

Live On

We got the news Monday morning. Our dear friend Wanda Bridgeforth had died. Wanda's daughter, Wanda Jr., had texted me last week to let me know "Mama is in hospice care at home." She added, "Don't be sad about this, Mama l-i-v-e-d long...and much!"

I was grateful to Junior for that message — her letting me know about hospice made the news about Wanda's death easier to swallow. Wanda was 101 years old. She'd been in my "Me, Myself & I" memoir-writing class 15 years, sharing her life stories there with us every week. What joy and wonderment I feel now, having had the honor to know Wanda, meet her family, laugh with her...it's all pretty miraculous.

Thinking about Wanda so much this past week got me reminiscing about meeting her for the first time: it all happened when she was in the audience at Printers Row Book Fair in 2007 to see her friend Minerva (another writer in the memoir class I led back then) appear with me at a presentation there. Here's the story.>

"Minerva told me she was going to be in the book fair with her teacher, and I should come and meet Beth Finke," Wanda told me, explaining that Minerva and Wanda had been friends since DuSable High School opened in 1935. Minerva hadn't mentioned that I was blind, and Wanda was sitting so far back that she didn't see my Seeing Eye dog Hanni at my feet until she walked up to say hello. "I said 'Holy Toledo! A blind lady teaching a writing class? This I gotta see!'"

I invited her to sit in on a class, and she signed right up. Minerva and Wanda brought a slice of Chicago history with them to class every week. Tens of thousands of Southern blacks flooded into Chicago during the Great Migration of the early 20th century. Minerva's parents came from Georgia, Wanda's came from Mississippi, and the stories these two read in class describe Bronzeville, the segregated neighborhood they grew up in, as a "city within a city."

Overcrowding, joblessness, and poverty was a fact of life, but so was literature, jazz, blues, and gospel music.

DuSable High School, the first Chicago high school built exclusively for African-American students, opened in the Bronzeville neighborhood in 1935. Minerva transferred in as a sophomore, and Wanda was a freshman. "I was in the birthday class," Wanda would remind us any time her beloved high school was mentioned. DuSable was built on Chicago's South Side 15 years before the Brown v. Board of Education decision. Wanda says it was built to keep schools segregated. "We were blocked in," she'd write. "We knew not to cross Cottage Grove, 51st Street or the train tracks." Everyone inside those boundaries was Black. "That was our neighborhood, and DuSable was our neighborhood high school."

That's Wanda earlier this year, modeling her 1960 Easter bonnet for her home health care worker.

When DuSable first opened, some neighborhood parents applied for permits to get their children into nearby White high schools. "Their parents didn't think a Black school could be any good," Wanda wrote, adding that she felt sorry for those kids. True, DuSable classes could be very crowded; she remembers 50 or so students squeezing into classrooms. "But at those other schools, if you were Black and you wanted to be in a play, you had to be a maid or a butler," she wrote. "At DuSable, we did everything, we were in all the plays, we wrote the school newspaper. We were having such a good time at DuSable."

Between the two of them, Minerva and Wanda were at the high school between 1935 and 1939. During those years they walked the hallways with some pretty impressive classmates, including Nat King Cole; John H. Johnson, publisher of Ebony and Jet magazines; Harold Washington, first African-American mayor of Chicago; comedian Redd Foxx; and singer Dinah Washington.

"Nat Cole added King to his name later," Wanda would tell me with a laugh. "You know, like Old King Cole!" They remembered Dinah Washington when she was Ruth Jones, and they knew Redd Foxx as Jon Sanford. "His brother was Fred, that's who Sanford and Son is named for," Wanda told us, reminiscing about the old television series. "They changed their names once they were stars."

DuSable's initial fame was in its music program, and Wanda and Minerva both sang during "Hi-Jinks" student talent shows there. "We were in the background, but we put on shows that were better than what was going on in Chicago professional theatres," Wanda wrote. "With musicians like Ruthie Jones and Nat Cole and all of those guys, we couldn't miss!"

And with writers like Minerva and Wanda in the memoir-writing classes I've led over the years, I couldn't miss, either. Their stories live on through the essays they wrote — I am so, so grateful. As Wanda always liked to say..."Hugs all around!"

A new restaurant has opened at 829 S Wabash in the East-West Student center. Besides burgers, it features some interesting items like the "No moo Shake (lactose-free), the Impossible Burger, a grilled chicken sandwich. And a warmed up cookie that's pretty good. They offer besides shakes, a variety of bottled drinks and the Mahalo joe, Waiakea hot coffee. You can order ahead (recommended) through their web site or phone

Editor's Letter: November, 9th 2022

Editor's Letter: November, 11th, 2022

Since the polls are still open as I write this, I really have no idea how we'll feel in the morning: euphoric, depressed or somewhere in between. Or we might not know much at all, given the infernally clunky voting process in this country and the possibility of days to get the vote counted. My experience voting at Jones College Prep High School was reasonable, given that our longstanding poll location closer to home had been downsized and the national shortage of election workers. Jones was busy. And filling in almost one-hundred races with a black Sharpie that tended to bleed through the ballot made me feel like I was back in the 1970s taking the SAT exam.

Given our country's increasingly disastrous experience with Election Day, it's time for a ground-up redesign in the system, beginning with making it electronic. (Brazil, a country nearly as big as the United States, has such a system and knows the election results to the last vote within a few hours of polls closing, eliminating things like hanging chads and the entire basis for Trump's 2020 antics.)

Since the logic is so compelling, it won't happen in our lifetimes. But if yesterday's election went as bad or worse than expected, it won't matter, since the Trumpist plan for the future is to deny, deny and deny unfavorable results while also taking control of the apparatus of elections whenever possible.

But I'm an optimist so I'll be looking for sunshine as you read this...

November 11th, 2022

As an experiment, I spent the afternoon a week ago today operating out of Convene Workplace, at 131 South Dearborn. Convene is in a similar business as the infamous We-Work, but its core operation is a meeting and conference facility, one that competes with hotels and private clubs for Fortune 500 offsite gatherings. It's a vast, handsome space, with contemporary architectural design flourishes that make you feel like you're working at that tech startup you've always wondered about.

Except nearly no one was around on a Friday afternoon, meaning that the dynamic for me was similar to the work-from-home setup we've been in since 2010. Just me and my laptop. Except that at Convene, someone else picked the background music and the tempting snacks were far too accessible.

NEWCITY newcity.com

The Friday ghost-town phenomenon is not unique to Convene, as conventional wisdom says that as workers return to the office with a more flexible mix of remote and in-person work, that most are choosing remote on Fridays and Mondays, which is leading to hand-wringing and pontificating over the implications for downtowns and their various worker-dependent businesses, like bars and restaurants. But I expect the story is unfinished, since we're really just crawling out of the pandemic, and we're perhaps on the verge of experiencing the first economic setback since it started. If the all-knowing Elon Musk thinks that a virtual company like Twitter can't function virtually, who am I to question?

With Field Museum Popup Ketapanen Kitchen, Ground-breaking Indigenous Chef Works To Preserve Native Culture

Chef Walks First, also known as Jessica Paemonekot, wants more Chicagoans to learn about (and eat) Native food. She's planning to turn her Field Museum pop-up into a food truck or permanent restaurant.

DOWNTOWN — A boundary-breaking Indigenous chef has been selling out of her tamales, pulled bison and other dishes during a pop-up at the Field Museum — and she's planning a food truck and permanent restaurant next.

Chef Walks First, also known as Jessica Paemonekot, operates Ketapanen Kitchen 9 a.m.-5 p.m. daily at the museum through Wednesday as part of Native American and Indigenous Heritage Month.

Some of the dishes often sell out by midday, so the Field is looking at how to keep them on its menu even after the pop-up ends, said J. Kae Good Bear, the museum's conservation cultural liaison. But the pop-up is just part of a growing empire for the chef.

Walks First is Chicago's first Native American executive chef. She attended Le Cordon Bleu College of Culinary Arts in Chicago before its closure, but her earliest culinary education was from cooking with her mother. Walks First said those early experiences led her prefer “cooking for an army” over assembling a dinner for two. “For Native people, cooking and sharing meals and food itself is part of everything we do,” Walks First said. “When you grow up in a communal setting, there’s lots of events. And anytime we’d go to these events, I would go in the kitchen and help. It’s always been second nature to me.”

Walks First, a member of the Menominee tribe of Wisconsin, started Ketapanen Kitchen, her catering business, seven years ago. Ketapanen has since “exploded,” she said, and she plans to develop a food truck and permanent establishment.

Though Walks First loves cooking, educating people about Native culture and food was also a central motivation to launching her business, she said.

“You live in Chicago, where there’s representation of every ethnicity, but there’s very minimal Native representation, and there was zero in the culinary industry,” she said. “I knew right then and there, that is what I needed to do.”

Though Chicago houses the country’s largest urban native community — with more than 100,000 Indigenous people residing in the area — Walks First said people are seldom aware of Indigenous people’s influence on the city.

“There are foods that most people eat every day [that] they do not realize are Indigenous things, like carrots, squash, various nuts and berries,” Walks First said.

Our Senator Earned her Seat in Congress

November 17, 2022

I was delighted when Tammy Duckworth won last week's election: it means she'll serve as senator here in Illinois for six more years. Senator Duckworth has a long career serving her country, and when it comes to disability access, she is an expert: she served in Iraq and lost both legs when a rocket-propelled grenade struck the helicopter she was co-piloting in 2004. After she won the 2017 election for Senator of the State of Illinois, an article in the Chicago Tribune pointed out that running a Senate campaign involves lots of travel and complicated logistics. From the article:

Duckworth said she and her staff have a pre-event checklist to make sure the site is up to their standards — and that means making sure even the bathrooms are wheelchair accessible.

"I don't go to any place that isn't accessible even though I have artificial legs that I can walk in; it's on principle," she said. "If someone in a wheelchair can't get in it, I'm not going to do an event there. Just because I can get in there with my artificial legs doesn't mean somebody else can."

The article said that during her campaign Duckworth often heard from voters who question her ability to serve. A question about using a wheelchair in public during the campaign came up when she first ran for Congress. "I'm not ashamed I'm in a wheelchair. I earned this wheelchair," she said. "I've always insisted it's not something that we hide."

A seasoned member of Congress now, Senator Duckworth joined Representative Sarbanes of Maryland last month to introduce the Websites and Software Applications Accessibility Act (S. 4998, H.R. 9021) in both houses of Congress. The bill will require employers, state and local governments, and private businesses to make their websites and applications accessible.

Much has been made about how people with disabilities benefitted from digital access during the COVID pandemic, but casual conversations I've had with friends who have visual impairments tell me how frustrated they've been with technology, the high number of web sites that are not easy to use if relying on speech software and the hours they've wasted trying to make it work.

I am one of those people. During the pandemic my husband Mike has had to take over much of the on-line ordering we do, the forms we are asked to fill out on line, and any online streaming we do. Throughout the pandemic I got a lot of messages in my in box about plays and concerts and lectures available on line free of charge, but when I gave them a try, the links and buttons were not accessible – frustrating!

If passed, this new legislation will make it clear that the Americans with Disabilities Act applies to websites and applications. I already know that my Senator will be voting in favor of the bill — she's the one who introduced it to the Senate!

Donation and Volunteer Support for New Arrivals from Texas

Since Wednesday, August 31st, the City of Chicago has welcomed hundreds of migrants bused from Texas to Chicago. Our city greeted them with dignity and respect, and the City government, in collaboration with local, state, federal, and community partners, continues to take action to ensure they have access to shelter, food, and other resources. We anticipate that the state of Texas will continue to bus migrants to Chicago and we remain committed to providing support and resources to our newly arrived neighbors during this transition period.

Century and Consumers Buildings Commission on Chicago Landmarks

Advice To Feds: Don't Demolish Historic Early Twentieth-Century Skyscrapers November 14, 2022

In last Thursday evening's public hearing, reports Dennis Rodkin at Crain's, commenters urged the federal government not to "waste" historical buildings on State Street. "Four early twentieth-century buildings the federal government wants to demolish because of security concerns should be saved and rehabbed," commenters said. Tearing down the sixteen-story Century and twenty-two-story Consumers Building towers and two of their neighbors on State Street "would be a waste of money, natural resources and the city's architectural heritage." Urbanize Chicago: "As the GSA seeks to demolish the buildings, they must go through multiple federal processes before any kind of work can begin. The National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA) requires federal agencies to consider the anticipated environmental impacts of proposed federal actions as part of their decision-making process and to provide appropriate public involvement. Occurring simultaneously, the GSA is also going through the National Historic Preservation Act (NHPA) process to accommodate historic preservation concerns with the needs of the federal undertaking through consultation with the State Historic Preservation Office (SHPO)."

Miller Studio Theatre

Thu, Dec. 1, 2022 thru Sun, Dec 4, 2022

VOTES FOR WOMEN by Elizabeth Robins (Play). Directed by Barbara Zahora
From the National Theatre: "We must get the conditions of life made fairer. We women must organise. We must learn to work together. We have all (rich and poor, happy and unhappy) worked so long and so exclusively for men, we hardly know how to work for each other. But we must learn."

The rallying cry of Miss Vida Levering, the rebellious protagonist of Elizabeth Robins' 1907 play, Votes for Women, reminds one how much, and how little, has changed during the last one hundred years.

The play is an unabashed propaganda piece which makes a forceful plea for alternative narratives for women outside of marriage and motherhood. As President of the Women Writers' Suffrage League, formed in 1908, the American actress turned activist was dedicated to achieving political change by "the use of the pen". Votes for Women was classified by its author as a "dramatic tract". It emerged directly from the women's suffrage movement and voiced the playwright's personal quest for political and social reform, while also tackling a series of taboo issues such as illegal abortion, unmarried motherhood and presenting a radical critique of male sexuality.

All venues are accessible through the 425 S. Wabash Ave. entrance. Photo ID may be required.

CTA Will Give New Hires $1,000 Signing Bonus In Hopes Of Filling 'Severe Workforce Shortage'

Transit agency leaders hope hiring bonuses, higher starting salaries and raises for staying on the job will entice desperately needed employees.

Mack Liederman 5:00 PM CST on Nov 18, 2022

CHICAGO — In its latest bid to fix service problems plaguing the agency, the CTA is spending $80 million to attract new bus and train workers — including a $1,000 signing bonus. The incentives for workers come as the CTA lumbers through intense scrutiny over train and bus service. Officials, residents and employees have blasted the transit system for long wait times, deteriorating conditions, security issues and “ghosts”: buses and trains that show up late or not at all. With public pressure mounting, embattled CTA President Dorval Carter Jr. appeared before City Council last week, saying reliability issues are due to a “severe workforce shortage” of 700 bus drivers and 200 train operators.

The CTA will give all new mechanics, bus drivers and train operators a $1,000 signing bonus, according to a news release. Workers must stay at the CTA for at least a year to keep the bonus, officials said.

Newly hired union employees and current workers also will get a 3 percent bonus for every six months they stay on the job through December 2023. The bonuses will be given in lump payments every six months that max out at $1,500 for bus and train operators and $1,200 for other employees, officials said. This benefit would not apply to bus mechanics and railcar repairers hired in 2022 and 2023.

The CTA also will raise starting salaries through 2024. New bus mechanics and railcar repairers normally start at 80 percent the normal hourly rate but now will start at 100 percent the rate: $39 to $40 an hour, officials said.

Starting rates for bus and rail operators will increase from $24 to $28 an hour, then to about $30 an hour as part of a contract agreement, officials said. The time it takes for them to reach top pay will also be shortened by a year, according to the CTA.

The transit agency pegs the total cost of the incentives at around $80 million over two years.

“Every industry has faced the challenges of attracting new employees and retaining current ones, and it’s an issue that has especially impacted the transit industry,” Carter said in a statement. “In order for CTA to hire and retain the best employees, we have to do everything we can to make CTA an even more attractive employer.”

Porous Gallery embraces the art of trash in 'The Discarded' exhibition

By Kimberly Kapela, Copy Editor

Located at 623 S. Wabash Ave. in room 411, the Porous Gallery hosts the latest exhibition, Abandoned shopping carts, trash bins and used stuffed animals grace the Porous Gallery in the newest installment of “The Discarded” exhibition.

Located at 623 S. Wabash Ave. in room 411, “The Discarded” is an experimental curatorial project by co-directors and curators Ryan Lucas and Grace Papineau-Couture. The exhibit highlights abandoned materials found on the street in hopes of it serving a new purpose for creators.

Lucas and Papineau-Couture, a second-year and a first-year graduate student in the fine arts program, respectively, invite their visitors to think conceptually about trash, in hopes of shedding light on materials that no longer serve the general public but can be repurposed as something new.

For the second exhibition held at the Porous, Papineau-Couture wanted to also showcase work from artists that had been left unfinished or leftover materials they used to create the piece and give it new life by displaying the unfinished artwork as something fresh and different.

“Right now, it’s very found-object focused,” Papineau-Couture said. “So anything that we see on the street, and we are drawn to visually or feel like we could display as an object, rather than just a piece of trash. That’s our major deciding factor: can we display this as something that can be read as an object instead of street garbage.”

Lucas said in order to make new art, the artist has to go through scrapped concepts and abandoned pieces before it is put on display.

“Conceptually, trash in general is something that we take advantage of, and some of the things that you find on the ground are the things that you take advantage of — everyday objects,” Lucas said.

Driver was going 75 mph in wrong lane when he hit car fleeing police in South Loop, prosecutors say

A driver charged with reckless homicide was traveling 75 mph in the wrong lane when he crashed into a car that was trying to elude police last weekend in the South Loop, Cook County prosecutors said Wednesday.

Kendall Sprouts, 18, collided about 8 p.m. Sunday with a Hyundai Sonata that was making a U-turn in the 1400 block of South Michigan Avenue, prosecutors said during Sprouts' initial hearing.

The driver of the Hyundai, Keyshawn Javon Gray, 22, had been pulled over by police but then took off, Chicago police and prosecutors said. As he tried turning around on the block, he was broadsided by the Infiniti G37 that Sprouts was driving, according to traffic reports and video of the collision.

Three other vehicles were struck after the initial impact, including two parked cars and a Jeep Compass driven by a 32-year-old woman that had two teenage passengers, authorities said.

The video shows that Gray began pulling into the opposite lane as Sprouts barreled toward the Jeep, apparently blocking the SUV from being struck directly.

The Hyundai flipped over, and Gray was rushed to Northwestern Memorial Hospital, where he was pronounced dead, officials said. An 18-year-old passenger in the Hyundai was taken to the hospital in fair condition. A third passenger, a 21-year-old man, was taken to Stroger Hospital in fair condition.

Sprouts, who was recorded stepping out of the driver's seat on the Infiniti by a police officer's body-worn camera, was taken to Stroger in fair condition, along with the driver of the Jeep and her passengers, a 14-year-old boy and a 13-year-old girl, according to police and the report.

Just before the crash, Sprouts narrowly missed striking an officer who had stepped out of a patrol car to approach the Hyundai for the traffic stop, prosecutors added.

Sprouts was charged with reckless homicide and aggravated reckless driving and was cited for failure to reduce speed. He was ordered held on $20,000.

Sprouts is a former wide receiver for Morgan Park High School's football team and is enrolled at St. Olaf College in Northfield, Minnesota, where he plays football, according to his defense attorney, Donna Rotunno, whose previous clients include Harvey Weinstein.

Rotunno noted Sprouts' lack of a criminal background and said her client didn't drink, take drugs or even have tattoos, and told Judge Kelly McCarthy that "he's not a flight risk; there is absolutely no reason to keep him in custody."

"This is a horrifyingly sad situation," Rotunno added. "But judge, I think what's missing from the state's proffer is the car that is pulling away from police is fleeing police."

McCarthy said Sprouts would need to post $2,000 to be released and ordered him to have no contact with anyone involved in the crash. The judge also allowed him to continue to attend school in Minnesota. His next court date was set for Dec. 12.

Catalytic converter thieves fire gun after security guard spots them in South Loop: CPD report

November 21, 2022 CWBChicago South Loop

Chicago — Catalytic converter thieves fired a gun after a security guard saw them trying to steal part of a vehicle behind the Marriott Marquis Chicago hotel in the South Loop on Sunday morning, according to a Chicago police report. As a bonus, the offenders escaped in a car that was carjacked last weekend.

The thieves were stealing the catalytic converter from a Toyota Prius in the 2100 block of South Prairie, not far from the hotel loading dock, when a security guard saw them around 6:10 a.m.

Two men ran from the Prius and jumped into another car when the guard approached them, the report said. As the thieves escaped in their getaway car, one fired a gun, but no injuries were reported.

The offenders got away in a black Nissan Altima bearing Florida license plates, the report said. According to CPD records, the Nissan was carjacked in the 7900 block of South Bennett on November 13.

One of the catalytic converter thieves was described as a Black male wearing a black hoodie with gray sweatpants.
